Democrat Calls Some Reduction in 4 Years Almost Inevitable

Jimmy Carter raised yesterday the possibility of a tax cut if he is elected President but then indicated it should not be taken as a firm promise.

The Democratic Presidential candidate campaigned in Pittsburgh and Erie, Pa., and in Cleveland before flying to New York yesterday afternoon for appearances in Brooklyn and Nassau County. It was his second visit to New York State, with its block of 41 Electoral College votes, in two days.

The equivocal remarks about tax cuts got Mr. Carter's day off to a shaky start. But the day ended with one of the best receptions he has received this year. An overflow crowd jamming the Sports Center Auditorium at Hofstra University in Hempstead, L.I., last night roared a huge welcome to him.

Stressed Reform on Taxes

Mr. Carter in a speech to the crowd called Republican claims to be the champion of the middle class "a cruel hoax." He said that Republican mismanagement of the economy had harmed the interests of the middle class as well as that of the poor and had created "a new poor" made up of professional or skilled middle-income Americans who had joined the unemployment rolls.

In Washington, Mr. Carter's chief economic adviser, Lawrence R. Klein, said yesterday that the national economy "has gone downhill so much" in recent weeks that "it is evident that the economy needs stimulus." [Page D7.]

Although he has for many months called for sweeping reform of the Federal income tax system, Mr. Carter has not explicitly promised a tax cut, leaving the impression that "reform" would collect

Export of Control Data's Cyber 172, Barred From Soviet, Is Allowed As a Gesture to Peking

By LESLIE H. GELB
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28 — President Ford, making exceptions to prevailing safeguards and established policy, has approved the sale to China of a computer system capable of being used for military as well as industrial purposes.

High Administration officials said the sale of two Control Data Corporation Cyber 172 computers and associated equipment was approved as a gesture of support to the new Chinese leadership.

The officials said the United States did not intend to sell the computer system to the Soviet Union, and the deal was an exception to the policy of selling to one of the Communist superpowers only what would also be sold to the other.

Negotiations Still Under Way

A National Security Council memorandum dated Oct. 12 and obtained by Aviation Week and Space Technology, a weekly, stated that Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger had recommended the lesser safeguards and the policy exception on the ground of overriding foreign-policy interests.

A State Department spokesman confirmed the decision to grant an export license. Negotiations to complete the deal are still under way between Control Data and the Chinese Government.

American approval, pending for more than a year, was finally given over the objections of the Energy Research and Development Administration. The agency, which is responsible for the nuclear weapons program, said the computer system was used in the United States for making calculations on nuclear tests and could be used by China for the same purpose.

The Pentagon, which had opposed the sale on the ground that the computer system could be used to support radar systems, withdrew its objections after the State Department agreed to press China to accept safeguards.

NEW KOREAN INQUIRY BY U.S. IS DISCLOSED

Charge That Seoul Agents Harass Residents Here Investigated

By RICHARD HALLORAN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28—Federal authorities said today that they had been investigating a wide range of allegations that Korean intelligence agents and other Koreans had been harassing and coercing and violating the civil rights of Korean aliens residing in the United States and of Korean-Americans.

The investigation involves the Department of Justice, the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the State Department. It reportedly centers on the operations of Korean Central Intelligence Agency officers posing as diplomats or consular officials and other Korean agents in this country.

The investigation is said to be separate from the parallel inquiry into alleged South Korean efforts to bribe and influence United States Congressmen that focuses on the activities of Park Tong Sun, a wealthy Korean known here as Tongsun Park. [Mr. Park arrived in Tokyo Thursday, but was hustled away from his arriving flight by bodyguards.]

Other Operations Investigated

The inquiry into South Korean intelligence action is part of a wider surveillance of foreign intelligence agency operations in the United States that includes those of Iran, Chile and Taiwan, all of whom have sizable numbers of citizens living here, some in political exile.

In the view of some investigators, the inquiries are hampered by diplomatic immunity, unclear and untested statutes and federal-state considerations, and taking cases to court might prove difficult.

Other government officials have reported that the Department of State, which has begun to cooperate in the investigation of Korean consular officials after an initial reluctance, is preparing to ask Ko-

Geneva Talks on Rhodesia Open After Chairman Averts a Boycott

Special to The New York Times

GENEVA, Oct. 28—The Geneva conference on Rhodesia got off to a delayed start today after last-minute negotiations by the British diplomat Ivor Richard averted a possible boycott by two powerful black nationalist groups that are anxious that Britain play a more assertive role in the talks.

The conference finally opened at 5:35 P.M., more than two and a half hours late. It was a solemn moment for both Prime Minister Ian D. Smith of Rhodesia and the leaders of the four black nationalist groups, who have acknowledged that the talks may present the last opportunity for agreement on a peaceful transfer of power from Rhodesia's 270,000 whites to its 6 million blacks.

For the Western powers, concerned over growing Soviet influence in southern Africa, the gathering in the ornate council chamber of the Palais des Nations had major diplomatic implications.

The conference, the seventh major effort to resolve the governmental dispute since Rhodesia broke away from Britain in 1965, could also represent the final chance to promote a biracial democracy in the former colony.

The opening session lasted only 20 minutes, adjourning until 10:30 A.M. tomorrow, after an opening statement by Mr. Richard. The conference chairman, Britain's chief delegate to the United Nations, included in his address a message from Prime Minister James Callaghan.

"I urge all concerned not to let this opportunity slip," the British leader said, in a five-sentence cable that reflected the sharp divisions between the white and black delegations and among the blacks themselves.

Smith Confronts Adversaries

Reporters were allowed to stay in the conference chamber until shortly before Mr. Richard tapped with a gavel to open the session. It was a dramatic scene as the portly, pipe-smoking chairman led Mr. Smith and several nationalists to their places.

It was the first time that the white Rhodesian had met with such a large assemblage of his adversaries, including several who have served long terms in Rhodesian jails.

The 57-year-old Mr. Smith, wearing a blue three-piece suit and a wartime-squadron tie, looked somewhat tense as he entered the marbled chamber. In the glare of television lights, he acknowledged a friend in the gallery, sat down and began chatting, smiling frequently, with his colleagues in the Salisbury Government. The black delegates hardly glanced his way.

The nationalist leader Joshua Nkomo was almost jovial. The 59-year-old Mr. Nkomo, in a tweed suit with blue suede shoulder panels, offered a strong contrast with the stern appearance of Robert Mugabe, his 51-year-old partner in the patri-

Ehrlichman Enters Prison Voluntarily

By LESLEY OELSNER
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28—John D. Ehrlichman, one of the Nixon Administration's most powerful advisers, voluntarily entered a Federal prison camp today to serve sentences for his Watergate crimes, even though appeals in both cases are pending.

As matters now stand, Mr. Ehrlichman will serve a minimum of 30 months and no more than eight years as a result of convictions in the "plumbers" case, in which he was sentenced to 20 months to five years, and in the Watergate cover-up case, in which he was sentenced to 30 months to eight years. Both sentences are to run concurrently.

Mr. Ehrlichman is continuing to press his appeals in both cases, one of his lawyers, Stuart Stiller, said here today. The former Nixon aide began his sentence at his own request, rather than wait, as he

What went wrong and why has Mr. Carter seemed less sure-footed in the fall than he appeared to be in the spring? Mr. Carter's associates can point to several factors. More detached onlookers can agree on some of them and suggest still others.

Although Mr. Carter expanded his national campaign organization by recruiting young political technicians who had worked for his defeated rivals in the primaries, he did not reach very deeply into the Democratic Party mainstream for either organizational skill, campaign management experience or intellectual talent. He kept his circle of really close and influential advisers limited to the Georgians and others who had been close to him in the past—and some observers consider this a grave mistake.

It is, however, debatable that this explains Mr. Carter's difficulties. Relatively, he appears to enjoy major organizational advantages over both the 1972 Democratic nominee, Senator George McGovern,

Berger Warns City Not to 'Maximize' Hospital Admissions

By RONALD SULLIVAN

The executive director of the New York State Emergency Financial Control Board warned yesterday that the effort by the city's municipal hospitals to fill empty beds with Medicaid patients to "maximize" its Federal and state reimbursement could make them liable to charges of criminal fraud.

Stephen Berger, the board's director, said that "if the municipal hospitals intend to go out and put people into beds or extend their stay in them simply to collect more Federal and state money, then it constitutes an illegal conspiracy to defraud the city, state and Federal taxpayers."

However, Dr. John L. S. Holloman Jr., the president of the New York City Health and Hospitals Corporation, said the hospitals were not admitting any Medicaid patients into municipal hospitals who did not belong there, regardless of the financial incentives provided by Federal and state funds.

"The corporation will not inappropriately admit patients to any municipal hospital," he said. "However, there is a tremendous reservoir of unmet health needs of the poor. Most of them who

News Analysis

Three weeks ago, Senator James L. Buckley and Daniel P. Moynihan debated for the first time. They differed on many issues but their differences were couched in gentility, humor and cordiality—befitting candidates from Yale and Harvard who had not come up the hard way in elective politics. It seemed as though it might be a particularly literate campaign free of the usual rancor. Instead, it has been downhill since that first debate. Instead of "Jim" and "Pat," it has been "extremist millionaire," "radical right," "cruddy," "elegant Charlie McCarthy," "double-domed intellectual," "liberal golden boy" and other pleasantries.

Each candidate accuses the other of starting the mud-slinging, but in any event, the gentility and cordiality faded—first in the face of polls that have consistently shown Senator Buckley trailing his opponent and then in the light of polls last week, including a New York Times survey, indicating that Mr. Moynihan's lead was shrinking.

From the start, Mr. Buckley's strategy has been to be uncharacteristically aggressive—to demand debates, maintain a heavy campaign schedule, stay on television with commercials from mid-August to Election Day and attack Mr. Moynihan on the issues.

In addition, he initially had his campaign manager, Leonard Saffir, do the 20th Anniversary of '56 Uprising Is Nearly Unnoticed in Hungary

M. T. J./Eastfoto

The annual wine festival was uppermost in the minds of visitors to Mór, in Fejér County, Hungary, some days ago.

By MALCOLM W. BROWNE
Special to The New York Times

BUDAPEST, Oct. 28—The 20th anniversary of the Hungarian rebellion, in which more than 20,000 people died, is passing without a murmur, seemingly all but forgotten.

New cars made within the Soviet bloc jam the old squares and streets of Budapest where, two decades ago, young Hungarians armed with gasoline bombs fought an unequal battle against Soviet tanks.

With the approach of Oct. 23, last Saturday, the anniversary of the beginning of the Hungarian uprising, there were some reports of official uneasiness. The police were said to have been somewhat more alert than usual for troublemakers.

Now, as 20 years ago, the Soviet Army is still in Hungary, and on Oct. 18, Soviet and Hungarian troops began joint maneuvers. The beginning of the exercise on that date might or might not have been related to the anniversary.

'Time Softened the Pain'

In any case, nothing has happened, and there seems little likelihood of any political tremors during the anniversary period, which ends Nov. 7, the day on which Soviet forces broke the back of the uprising.

"Time and material prosperity have softened the pain," a middle-aged Hungarian remarked.

Certainly, Hungary's material progress, compared with the other nations in the Soviet bloc, has been striking.

New chains of department stores are blooming in Budapest and other major towns. Cars, color television sets and other expensive things are sold rapidly, and Hungarians eat more than most Europeans.

Of the 200,000 or so Hungarians who fled the country in 1956, more than 60,000 have returned. As the regime of Janos Kadar has grown increasingly confident, it has progressively relaxed political controls.

Critics of the Government say they doubt that there are any political prisoners. Two leading dissidents, the writers Ivan Szelenyi and Gyorgy Konrad, have been permitted to leave Hungary during the past year. The relaxation of restraints remains only partial, however.

"No Hungarian is in doubt that under the velvet glove the iron fist remains," a man said. Referring to Hungary's Stalinist dictator, removed in 1956, the man addded, "Matyas Rakosi is long gone, but the system that created him remains."

It is virtually as difficult to obtain a passport to leave Hungary as it was in the harshest days of the Rakosi era.

"We support our Government and Comrade Kadar," a student said. "Why can't they trust their people to the extent of letting us travel abroad, as Yugoslavia's Tito does?"

Cautious criticism of Mr. Kadar's administration is permitted, provided it does not overstep obvious limits. The Government permitted an Austrian television team to film a program on the 20th anniversary of the uprising, knowing that Austrian television can be received in a large part of western Hungary. But anything resembling real protest is quickly stifled.

An enduring hero of all young Hungarians has been the poet and revolutionary firebrand Sandor Petofi, who died in 1849. Petofi is regarded as the embodiment of resistance to foreign tyranny because of his role in the independence war of 1848-49. The Hungarians were beaten down by a combined Austrian and Russian army in that war, but the spirit survived.

Nearly every year since the 1956 rebellion, groups of students have attempted to hold silent gatherings in front of Petofi's statue on his anniversary. The gatherings, intended as a protest against the Soviet role in Hungary, have grown smaller with the years, and sometimes fail to take place altogether.

Police have always been on hand, taking photographs of participants and sometimes holding them for a few hours of questioning and warning. The sons and daughters of party officials have sometimes been among the demonstrators, to the embarrassment of their parents.

No Violent Clashes Since 1956

But there have been no violent clashes in Hungary since 1956. Despite occasional fears that large increases in the price of food last summer might lead to riots of the kind that have periodically rocked Poland, all remained quiet.

Mr. Kadar is often described as the most acceptable Communist leader the country could have, and his supporters contend that he could even win a popular election. But he is unlikely to have to face such a test.

In 1958, his administration hanged Imre Nagy, the party leader ousted with the help of Soviet armor. Mr. Nagy had advocated a pluralist democracy in Hungary, in which opposition parties were to have participated.

"Mr. Kadar is fine," a Hungarian said. "Some of us may still recall that during the revolution, on Nov. 1, he made a great radio speech supporting Nagy and the uprising. And then a few hours later, he went off and joined the Russians.

"But 20 years are a long time ago. It's better to be practical and have whipped cream for your coffee than to spend the rest of your life nursing old sores."

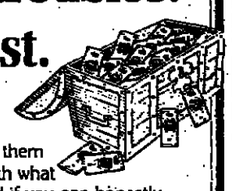
Honest.



Here's what you do. Buy a pouch of Captain Black and Captain Black Gold. Try them both. Compare them with what you're smoking now and if you can honestly tell us that you can find a milder, cooler, more bite-free tobacco than ours . . . we'll give you a dollar for your troubles. (See below).

We're making this offer because we believe we understand pipe smokers. Just as the surfer travels around the world looking for that one Perfect Wave, the pipe smoker roams all over the tobacco market looking for that one Perfect Tobacco.

With no modesty at all, we announce two perfect tobaccos: Captain Black and Captain Black Gold. Two extraordinary pipe mixtures, both designed to make pipe-smoking a total pleasure.

Open a pouch or tin of Captain Black and discover the sinfully insinuating scent of this masterful blend of Cavendish, White Burley and rare Turkish in this deep black, bite-free pipe mix.

Then, for lovers of the great Cavendish—there is Captain Black Gold, the most carefully selected, most matured Cavendish you can buy. It's exceptionally mild, slow-burning and non-biting.

So try Captain Black and Captain Black Gold now. You'll either discover the tobacco you love, or you'll get a dollar. If you don't think our tobaccos are better than your tobaccos, send the pouches from both our tobaccos to Lane Limited, 419 Park Avenue South, New York City, N.Y. and we'll send you a dollar. African Virus to be Studied in U.S.

By LAWRENCE K. ALTMAN

Federal scientists at the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta expect to receive specimens today from victims of a new disease in Africa to help determine how serious a threat the infection might represent to the world.

In recent weeks, it has killed at least 335 people, including doctors and nurses who treated victims, in Zaire and the Sudan. The mode of spread is not known and no effective treatment exists.

Since the World Health Organization sent a team of doctors to investigate the outbreak in Zaire on Oct. 6, scientists at the Atlanta center and in Europe have identified the virus as one not previously known.

"It is a new virus in the Marburg family," said Dr. William H. Foege, assistant to the director of the Center for Disease Control, in a telephone interview last night.

Great Peril Is Discussed

He said he was expecting three epidemiologists from the center who are in Zaire to telephone the results of their investigation.

In Brussels yesterday, an international group of scientists, including the American team, issued a statement that said: "The capacity of the virus for interhuman transmission is extremely serious. It poses the gravest danger due to a virus disease encountered in public-health care in more than 25 years."

Dr. Foege, who said that the center had no information about the statement, added that he could neither confirm nor deny it. He noted that information previously received from the team indicated that the epidemic was on the wane.

Dr. Maurice Kivits and Dr. Jan Burke, who head the Belgian medical cooperation mission to Zaire, formerly the Belgian Congo, and who recently returned from there, released the statement.

Symptoms of the ailment are said to include high fever and bleeding. The virus is believed to affect the capillary blood vessels, which connect arteries and veins, and to interfere with the clotting mechanism, leading to lethal internal bleeding.

The two Belgian doctors said that Belgian and other researchers had set a high priority on trying to develop something to help combat the infection.

Dr. Burke told United Press International that a medical mission in the outbreak area north of Bumba, Zaire, would try to gather as many blood samples as possible from people who have been in contact with victims or have recovered from the disease as a means to help develop therapy and to determine how many nonfatal infections might have occurred.

"The main problem will of course be to convince the local population that they should contribute some of their blood," Dr. Burke said.

The disease, called a viral hemorrhagic fever, is a variant of Marburg disease, which is also known as green monkey disease. It was identified in Marburg, West Germany, in 1967 when 30 laboratory technicians became ill and 7 died after handling green monkeys from Uganda and Kenya.

The report from Brussels said that serum from victims who had recovered from Marburg disease had proved ineffective in treating the new infection.

Women voting in Cairo yesterday during Egypt's parliamentary elections

Egyptians, in Relatively Free Voting, Elect Assembly

By JAMES F. CLARITY
Special to The New York Times

CAIRO, Oct. 28—A cautious and tentative liberalization of Egyptian political life began formally today as millions of voters elected a parliament in the first relatively free voting in Egypt since the early 1950's during the rule of King Farouk.

The final results of the voting, in which 1,660 candidates competed for 347 seats in the parliament, the People's Assembly, will not be known for several days or possibly a week. But there is little doubt among Egyptian political analysts that the Assembly will be dominated by representatives favorable to the policies of President Anwar el-Sadat.

Mr. Sadat has made it clear that today's voting does not mean a giant step toward Western-style democracy. But the President, who won another six-year term almost unanimously in a one-candidate plebiscite last month, is letting a little air into the tightly controlled system that supports him.

Mr. Sadat's decision to allow the election was seen here as motivated by his desire to provide an outlet for political restlessness in a country with severe economic problems. It was also seen as reflecting the President's intention of presenting Egypt as having the most liberal political atmosphere in the largely authoritarian Arab world, serving to enhance Egypt's prestige not only in the eyes of the Western democracies but also in the third-world countries of Asia and Africa.

Increasing Influence Seen

While the free elections under King Farouk were for virtually powerless Assembly positions, the representatives elected this week are expected to have increasing influence in Egyptian politics, though certainly not enough to challenge any major policy decision of Mr. Sadat.

But the election campaign, in which about nine million of the country's 38 million people were registered to vote, stirred animated public exchanges on what governmental policy should be—for example, on a free press and the right of workers to strike and hold public demonstrations.

The increased freedom to complain and attack one's political opponents is being done within the controlled framework of the Arab Socialist Union, still the country's only legal political organization.

But for the national election, Mr. Sadat has permitted the formation of three groups within the party—leftists, rightists and the centrists. The centrists, headed by Mr. Sadat's Prime Minister, Mamdouh Salem, are expected to win a comfortable majority in the Assembly.

The pro-Sadat candidates predictably approved Mr. Sadat's policies of running a mixed economy of socialism and free enterprise. Foreign policy, including the United States position on the Middle East, was not a campaign issue; all candidates tacitly conceded that this was an area to be left exclusively to the President.

The rightists, headed by a wealthy cotton broker, Mustafa Kamel Murad, openly pledged to return to a capitalist system. At a recent news conference, Mr. Murad advocated liberalized import policies, permission to open private banks, changing of the fiscal policy that keeps the Egyptian pound at an artificially high official rate and a return of light industry from the state to private ownership.

The leftists led by Khaled Mohieddin, a Marxist and one of the officers who helped Gamal Abdel Nasser depose King Farouk in 1952, have been careful to avoid being identified with Communism, a label that means for many Egyptians anti-Islamic atheism and adherence to the policies of the Soviet Union, which is now in deep disfavor with the Sadat leadership.

Arab governments are committed to bringing the Palestinians back into Lebanon under the so-called Cairo agreement signed by Lebanon and the Palestine Liberation Organization seven years ago but never put fully into effect.

The agreements called for the Palestinian forces to be confined to camps and to certain areas in the south.

The interpretation of the agreement in the next few weeks may cause friction between President Elias Sarkis of Lebanon and the Palestinian leadership.

President Sarkis, who returned from Cairo yesterday, held his first consultations with right-wing Christian leaders today.

The priority task of Mr. Sarkis is to reopen the road between the Presidential Palace in Baabda, a village in the foothills east of Beirut, and the Moslem-controlled western part of the city.

Moslem politicians have not been able to call on him because they would have to cross the front line in mid-Beirut, which remains dangerous despite the cease-fire that began eight days ago. Not being able to receive Moslem political figures, Mr. Sarkis has not been in a position to appoint a prime minister, who must be a Sunni Moslem under the old Lebanese system of apportioning power and positions among the country's religious groups.

Sniping, long exchanges of automatic-weapons fire and some commando raids have been a daily occurrence despite the cease-fire. But the actions have been so undramatic compared with what the people of Beirut became accustomed to over the last few months that the general impression is that the cease-fire is holding just fine.

During the midday hours, there are many more people in the streets. Women who had not dared to leave their apartments for weeks have resumed shopping trips and visits to friends.

Israelis Wary But Unalarmed by Shifts in Lebanon

By WILLIAM E. FARRELL
Special to The New York Times

JERUSALEM, Oct. 28—Israeli officials are carefully analyzing reports from Lebanon of an improvement in relations between two foes, Syria and the Palestine Liberation Organization, as well as reports of a buildup of Palestinian forces in southern Lebanon close to northern Israel.

So far there has been no agreement here, at least in public, as to what the rapidly changing developments in Lebanon mean for Israel, which has a winding 80-mile fenced border with Lebanon.

Foreign Ministry officials said today they did not think that a movement of Palestinian guerrillas to southern Lebanon constituted a "mass movement" at this time but that developments there were under constant scrutiny.

"We are not aware of a significant movement of the P.L.O. to be alarmed over at the moment," one official said.

A key question in the situation in Lebanon, according to some Israeli officials, concerns Syria's relations with the right-wing Christian Lebanese forces, which Damascus has supported.

The reports that Syria and the P.L.O. are again cooperating has raised questions as to whether Syria has sold out the Christians, or is willing to stand back and let the Palestinians and the Christians fight it out or, by permitting P.L.O troops to head south, is conducting a balancing act among some of the warring factions in Lebanon.

Battle Front 'Close to Israel'

"The battle front has moved very close to Israel," a Government official said.

Israel is also concerned about the implications of the makeup of a proposed 30,000-member Arab peacekeeping force in Lebanon, which was agreed upon earlier this month by six Arab leaders at a conference in Saudi Arabia and confirmed at another leadership conference in Cairo early this week.

The force is expected to be composed mainly of Syrians, another indication here that Syria has won recognition among other Arab nations of its predominance in Lebanon. Of major importance to Israel is the question whether Syria is allowing the Palestinians to regroup in southern Lebanon in positions close enough to the border for renewal of raids and other terrorist action.

Foreign Minister Yigal Allon and other Israeli officials have repeatedly said that Israel will not tolerate a return of Palestinian guerrillas to the border areas.

Earlier in the Lebanese civil war, Israel declared a policy of nonintervention as long as its so-called "red line" was not crossed. That has not been definitely spelled out, but it is construed to mean that Israel will not act as long as the Syrian troops in Lebanon do not advance south of the Litani River.

During recent months, Israel has aided and equipped southern Lebanese Christian villagers with arms and military supplies, according to reports in the foreign press. In addition, the Israeli Government has operated what it calls a "good-fence" policy along the Lebanese border. That policy began with medical care for Lebanese villagers. It now has expanded to include food, water, trade and even jobs for some Lebanese who cross the border each day.

One official said that the "good fence" and the extensive publicity it had received had irritated a number of Arab countries and might even provide impetus for a united Arab effort against Israel, particularly if the P.L.O. guerrillas regrouped in the south in substantial numbers.

Iran Returns Defecting Soviet Pilot

Special to The New York Times

MOSCOW, Oct. 28—The Soviet Union announced today that Iran had returned a Soviet pilot who flew a light plane across the border last month in search of political asylum.

The announcement, by the Soviet press agency, Tass, said that the pilot, Lieut. Valentin I. Zasimov, was extradited Monday under an antihijacking agreement signed by the two countries in August 1973. It said the plane would also be returned.

The report came a day after the Nobel Peace Prize winner, Andrei D. Sakharov, and four other Soviet dissidents issued a statement appealing to the Shah of Iran not to return the pilot. "He did not use violence, he did not put anybody's life at risk but his own," the statement said, "and in our opinion his action could not possibly be classified as air piracy."

'Criminal Act of Seizure'

It was also signed by Dr. Sakharov's wife, Yelena Bonner, former Maj. Gen. Pyotr Y. Grigorenko, the Ukrainian poet Mikola Rudenko and Yuri Orlov, who heads a group of dissidents monitoring Soviet compliance with the Helsinki agreement.

Tass said that Lieutenant Zasimov "committed a criminal act of seizure of an Aeroflot plane AN-2 and hijacked it to Iran."

The defection took place Sept. 25, 19 days after Lieut. Viktor I. Belenko flew a MIG-25 jet fighter to Japan. Lieutenant Belenko was granted political asylum in the United States, and his plane, the most advanced of its type in the Soviet arsenal, was dismantled and subjected to minute examination by Japanese and American experts.

Moscow Denounced Tokyo Action

The Soviet Union denounced the Japanese Government for refusing to return pilot and plane immediately. Leonid I. Brezhnev, the Soviet Communist Party chief, said this week in a speech that Japan's actions had "seriously beclouded the general atmosphere of relations."

A Western diplomat speculated that the strong Soviet reaction to Japan had influenced Iran's response. Iran shares a 1,250-mile border with the Soviet Union and has long been apprehensive about Soviet pressure.

After the pilot's return, Izvestia, the Soviet Government newspaper, reported that Iran and the Soviet Union had signed a four-year trade agreement. The Iranians will get industrial equipment, drilling rigs, motor vehicles, rolled ferrous metal, timber, newsprint and fertilizer, Izvestia said, and the Russians will buy natural gas, lead, zinc, cotton fiber, leather and dried fruit.

I.R.A. Aide Slain in Belfast Hospital

BELFAST, Oct. 28 (UPI)—Maire Drumm, former vice president of the Provisional Sinn Fein, political wing of the Irish Republican Army Provisionals, was shot to death tonight in her bed at Belfast's Mater Hospital.

The police said three youths, one dressed in a white hospital coat, had walked into the ward where Mrs. Drumm was recuperating from eye surgery and shot her while she lay in her bed. Another woman sitting by her bed was wounded in the leg. Mrs. Drumm, 53, had been hospitalized for three weeks.

The Mater Hospital, Belfast's sole Roman Catholic voluntary hospital, is in the Crumlin Road, a predominantly Protestant area, a half-mile from the city center.

The police declined to say whether the woman wounded in the leg was a patient or a visitor.

Mrs. Drumm, her husband, Jimmy, and their two sons and three daughters were all strong supporters of Northern Ireland's Republican movement.

She was detained for three weeks recently under a charge of incitement to hatred following a speech at a rally in Belfast in which she said the city would be destroyed brick by brick. She was released without being brought to trial.

Earlier in the day, gunmen shot two part-time soldiers of the Ulster Defense Regiment in separate incidents, killing one and seriously wounding the other.

Gunmen ambushed and killed the first soldier as he returned to his home from his job as a mailman in the village of Altmore, near Pomeroy, about 40 miles northwest of Belfast. The man's wife said two gunmen held her in their home while others waited outside and killed the mailman at point blank range.

He was the 60th Ulster Defense Regiment soldier killed since the regiment was founded in 1970, and the ninth killed this year.

The other man was shot and seriously wounded on the doorstep of his home in Londonderry when he answered a ring at the door. The police said two youths armed with automatic pistols had fired six shots at him, hitting him in the chest and stomach.

In Belfast, a bank official shot and wounded by gunmen some months ago died of his wounds today.

Israeli Seamen on Strike

TEL AVIV, Oct. 28 (AP)—Israel's national shipping line was put out of operation by a strike today but last-minute Government intervention averted a threatened walkout of civil aviation workers. Brent Scowcroft, assistant to the President, acknowledged that the standards in the sale to China were less stringent than usual but stated that they were fully adequate nonetheless.

United States officials said the Soviet Union and other Communist countries in Eastern Europe had in the past accepted standard safeguards, such as monitoring and inspection rights on their soil.

President Ford's decision to proceed with the sale runs right up to the line of the permissible limit that he himself drew during the foreign policy debate with Jimmy Carter, the Democratic candidate. Asked whether he would sell military equipment to China, Mr. Ford responded:

"I do not believe that we, the United States, should sell, give or otherwise transfer military hardware to the People's Republic of China, or any other Communist nation, such as the Soviet Union and the like."

Advanced computer systems, communications equipment and the like are generally considered to be of the highest potential military value. American officials, in response to queries, are now saying that the Cyber 172 system is not among the more modern ones. When asked about the system a year ago, most officials described it as advanced.

The sales decision is in keeping with Mr. Kissinger's assurances to the new leadership in Peking that the United States is interested in China's security relative to the Soviet Union. At a news conference on Friday, he denied that the United States ever had "any defense discussions with China," and said "we believe that the territorial integrity and sovereignty of China is very important to the world equilibrium, and we would consider it a grave matter if this were threatened by an outside power."

Some officials felt that approval of the sale was bound to irritate Soviet leaders. Several Soviet requests to buy computers have been rejected in recent years. A year ago, the Commerce Department rejected an application by International Business Machines Corporation to sell a computerized reservation system to Intourist, the Soviet travel agency, on the ground that it could not be adequately "safeguarded from unauthorized use."

The actual sale of the Cyber 172, if completed, will be made by a French affiliate of Control Data, the Compagnie Generale Geophysique. The estimated cost of the Cyber is said to be $2 million.

When the license is formally granted, the Commerce Department will publish the date the license is issued, a vague description of the item sold and to whom, and the dollar value.

Another hurdle that the sale still has to clear is approval by the international coordinating committee known as Cocom. Organized in 1949, it is an informal group that maintains a list of strategic items that can be sold to Communist nations only when approved unanimously by its members. The members are Japan and the nations of the North Atlantic alliance, except Iceland. American officials said they expected Cocom approval.

Prisoner Dies After Melee

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28 (UPI)—A prisoner who grabed a gun from a United States marshal in a courtroom yesterday and fired a wild shot at the judge died from a lacerated heart a short time later, a medical examiner said today. Dr. James L. Luke said that the man, Curtis E. Hoston Jr., 29 years old, had been jumped on and wrestled to the floor after firing the shot in District of Columbia Superior Court. A short time later he died from a heart laceration apparently caused when someone pressed on his chest forcing his heart against the spine.

Cyber 172 Being Used In Scientific Research

The Cyber 172 computer system that is being sold to China "is at the low end of our large-scale general-purpose computer line," a spokesman for the Control Data Corporation in Minneapolis said yesterday.

The computer, a miniaturized-circuit type with a storage capacity ranging from two to eight million bits of information, sells for approximately $1 million, depending on the amount of auxiliary equipment used. More than 70 have been delivered since the model became available in July 1975.

The system is used in educational research and in technical areas of scientific research and data-gathering.

Li Hsien-nien, Economic Chief, in Prime Minister's Role in Peki

By FOX BUTTERFIELD
Special to The New York Times

HONG KONG, Oct. 28—After all the breathtaking changes of the last few weeks in Peking, the pace of events seems to have slowed somewhat, with China's new authorities settling down to the difficult task of realigning party posts and readjusting government policies. Nevertheless, each day still seems to bring some fresh if more oblique clues to developments in the Chinese capital. Analysts here have taken particular note, for example, of the increased role of Li Hsien-nien, the Deputy Prime Minister who for many years has been in charge of the economy.

Notes on China

In the last two days he has received five ambassadors, a function that might indicate he is now acting as the Prime Minister. Two weeks ago he also served as host for a visit by Prime Minister Michael Somare of Papua New Guinea, another job that would be handled by a Prime Minister.

The official Prime Minister is still Hua Kuo-feng. But on Oct. 7 he was elevated by the party's Politburo to be party Chairman, a more important position, as well as chairman of the party's Military Commission, a body that supervisess the armed forces.

The presumption, and it is no more than that, is that with his new duties, Mr. Hua is too busy to attend to government functions and that job may have been delegated to Mr. Li, who would be a natural choice for the post. He is the most experienced among the civilian leaders, with a background in both economic management and foreign affairs. A crusty, 69-year-old man, he was also one of Chou En-lai's closest associates.

It may not prove significant, but analysts are also intrigued by a coincidence involving Mr. Li and three others among the 12 men now left on the Politburo—Chen Hsi-lien, the military commander of the Peking region; Hsu Shih-yu, the commander of the Canton military region, and Li Teh-sheng, the Manchurian commander.

All happen to be from Hwangan County in Hupeh Province, and all are believed to have been born into peasant families. They also shared early experiences in the late 1920's and early 1930's in the Communist base of the border area of Hupeh, Anhwei and Honan provinces, which was second only to the Kiangsi base area, where Mao Tse-tung and his associates got their start.

The Globe and Mail, Toronto
Li Hsien-nien

Local ties have traditionally produced powerful shared interests. In recent years this has not always been true among the Communists. Mao and Liu Shao-chi, the former head of state who fell from power in the Cultural Revolution, both came from neighboring counties in Hunan Province.

But the four senior leftists who were arrested earlier this month, including Mao's wife, Chiang Ching, all worked together in Shanghai during the Cultural Revolution.

In the three weeks since Mr. Hua and his associates assumed control, they have indicated that they intend to return to the emphasis on economic growth and probably the orderly, conventional methods that were the hallmark of Prime Minister Chou.

There are hints that they may also revert to the relatively more open policy toward the arts that existed before the Cultural Revolution, when Miss Chiang and her colleagues became the cultural overlords.

In a dispatch yesterday the Chinese press agency, Hsinhua, pointed out that Lu Hsun, the modern writer and an early Communist, had devoted roughly half of his work to translating Western literature. Since Miss Chiang imposed her dogmatic standards on cultura in the late 1960's, there have been virtually no new translations of foreign literature into Chinese.

Hsinhua said that Lu Hsun had considered translation important to "reform society" and that he had attacked "maggots in the revolutionary camp," an expression now applied to the four leftists. Then the dispatch said:

"The study and translation in China of literature from other lands continues along the road, advocated by Chairman Mao, of learning from and carrying forward Lu Hsun's spirit."

Hsinhua added: "Lu Hsun was also attracted to the powerful graphic arts being produced by progressive artists in other lands. He advocated and encouraged a whole new school of graphic arts in China."

In the elliptical manner of Chinese politics, these comments suggested the possibility of a fresh direction to artists and writers.

The old Minister of Culture, Yu Hui-yung, who was closely associated with Miss Chiang, is already believed to have been arrested. His place has apparently been taken, at least temporarily, by Hua Shan, a former journalist and writer of children's stories who was criticized in the Cultural Revolution.

There were new public accusations today against Miss Chiang and other leftists. A Kwangsi broadcast said they had "unscrupulously tampered with Chairman Mao's instructions and even forged a so-called letter of Chairman Mao." It was the first official mention that the leftists had tried to fabricate a last testament to keep themselves in power.

Another broadcast, from Shansi Province, said Miss Chiang had visited the Tachai model farm in 1975 "in a vain attempt to swallow the whole." There have been other reports that she has been accused by the Politburo of trying to use the farm for her own ends.

The Shansi broadcast also said the leftists "sent some persons to conspire" in February to stir up factional quarrels and they "incited the masses to fight with each other and even attempted to strike down a large number of responsible cadres of the party, government and army."

In addition the radio accused the leftists of having blocked a Central Committee directive in July on resolving labor troubles, which have reportedly been particularly bad in Shansi. These problems were said to involve factional fights, and there may have also been some agitation about wage grievances.

Finally, the Shansi radio said the leftists had "interfered with and sabotaged" the campaign to criticize Teng Hsiao-ping, the senior party leader who was ousted in April as an alleged rightist. Could this charge mean that the accusations against Mr. Teng might be found to have been trumped up by the leftists? It was a possibility that could not be ruled out.

Ford Discloses Nuclear-Curb Plan; Carter Calls It Too Little, Too Late

By DAVID BURNHAM
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28 — President Ford today formally announced a broad new Government program to prevent nuclear materials intended for peaceful purposes from being used for atomic weapons, and Jimmy Carter, the Democratic nominee for President, charged it was "too little and too late."

Announcing the program while campaigning in Ohio, Mr. Ford called on "all the nations of the world to join in a cooperative effort to expand the benefits of the peaceful uses of nuclear energy while preventing nuclear proliferation."

Details of the Ford Administration's new policy on how to deal with the problem of the spread of nuclear weapons were outlined in a 14-page Presidential statement issued during a briefing in Washington by Robert W. Fri, the deputy chief of the Energy Research and Development Administration, and Charles W. Robinson, Deputy Secretary of State for Economic Affairs.

Mr. Ford's statement, an account of which appeared in The New York Times today, said that preventing the spread of nuclear weapons represented "one of the major challenges facing all the nations of the world today."

Extremely Complex Proposal

Mr. Ford declared that if the collective effort to prevent the rapid increase in the number of nations with nuclear weapons was not successful "we would face a world in which the security of all is threatened."

Because dealing with the problem of the spread of atomic weapons involves extremely complex questions about both the domestic fuel policy of the United States and its international relations, the Ford Administration's proposal is extremely complex.

The President said he had decided that the United States should "greatly accelerate its diplomatic initiatives" to control the spread of plutonium and the equipment to extract it from the spent fuel of nuclear power reactors. Plutonium can be use das a supplement reactor fuel, but it can also be fashioned into atomic bombs.

The diplomatic initiatives the President proposed included negotiations with individual nations and a strengthening of the International Atomic Energy Agency, which administers a safeguard program.

Another part of the Administration proposal, according to Mr. Ford, was his decision that "the United States should no longer regard reprocessing of used nuclear fuel as a necesary and inevitable step in the nuclear fuel cycle, and that we should pursue reprocessing and recycling in the future only if they are found consistent with our international objectives."

The nuclear industry and the Federal Government have in the past argued that plutonium could be safeguarded and should play an important role in the nation's long-term energy development—partly because its use would increase the energy output from uranium, which now is the basic reserve fuel, and partly as a necessary step in the development of the experimental breeder reactor, an advanced design that would be totally fueled by plutonium.

While saying that the United States should no longer consider plutonium as a material necessary for the production of nuclear energy, Mr. Ford at the same time ordered the energy administration to "define a reprocessing and recycle evaluation program" that apparently would conduct research on whether adequate safeguards and controls could be developed to permit the use of plutonium.

During today's briefing, Mr. Fri said the exact nature of the plutonium evaluation program had not been decided upon, but a definite plan would be included in the President's budget when it is sent to Congress in January.

The response to the President's statement, made public less than a week before the election, was mixed.

Fred C. Ikle, head of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency within the State Department, said he believed the program "represents very substantial progress on nonproliferation. For the first time, what we are doing domestically has been brought into harmony with what we are trying to accomplish internationally."

Another State Department official, who requested anonymity, said the final position of the President represented a major victory for those in the Administration with a primary concern about proliferation and something of a defeat for those seeking the rapid development of nuclear power.

Mr. Carter, in a statement issued from his campaign headquarters in Atlanta, said that if Mr. Ford's program had been issued two years ago it would have been "a step in the right direction. Today, it is a shortsighted, campaign-inspired attempt to correct the timid record of the past."

Charging that India, Pakistan, Brazil, Egypt, Taiwan and Korea had all expressed an interest in producing the bomb, Mr. Carter said that "the United States must provide strong leadership, using our own exports of nuclear fuel and technology to persuade other countries not to seek or sell the technology to make the bomb."

How can a cigarette be de-tarred, but not de-tasted?

It seems hard to believe.

Most low-tar cigarettes are low-taste cigarettes. So who's kidding who? If Pall Mall Extra Mild has only 7 mg. tar, how can it be an exception? The reason Pall Mall Extra Mild is de-tarred, but not de-tasted is because it has the Air-Stream filter that reduces tar—but not taste.

What's more Pall Mall Extra Mild starts with really great tasting tobaccos. Tobaccos specifically selected for extra mild taste. And when you've got great taste to begin with, you've got great taste to end with. Try a carton. You'll find it hard to believe you're smoking a cigarette with less tar than 95% of all cigarettes sold!

REAN INQUIRY IS DISCLOSED

leave the United States minating evidence can be quiry into the operations rean Central Intelligence ast year when witnesses subcommittee headed by Donald M. Fraser, Demo-a, testified on the alleged Korean residents here. n was turned over to the ent for further inquiry

But investigators were said to be obstructed because some allegations of criminal actions, such as assault, are violations of state and not Federal law. Others, such as violations of civil rights, cannot be prosecuted because the alleged violators have diplomatic immunity.

The Foreign Agent Act, which requires those representing a foreign government to register with the Justice Department, also does not apply to those with diplomatic immunity.

Diplomatic immunity, however, does not apply to persons such as Honcho C. Kim, of Lanham, Md., a Korean resident who has sought to promote South Korean interests here. Some Koreans have charged that he is trying to establish himself in an influential position similar to that ascribed to Park Tong Sun.

Mr. Kim, whose article "Park's Shining Korean Camelot" appeared on the Op-Ed page of The New York Times in August 1975, also claimed that he could arrange an interview for a Times reporter with President Park Chung Hee. Although a Times reporter did interview President Park in August 1975, it was arranged in Seoul.

A main target of the operations of the Korean Intelligence Agency here has been the Korean community, which has rapidly grown to about 250,000 since the immigration act that became effective in 1968 opened the doors to greater immigration from the Orient. An unknown number of those immigrants have become naturalized American citizens.

The Korean Government, aware that earlier rulers of Korea, notably the Japanese, were the target of subversion and attempted overthrow by exiles, has taken pains to keep Koreans here from organizing against President Park Chung Hee.

That effort, according to anti-Park Koreans in the United States, has become steadily more apparent since 1971, when President Park started imposing increasingly severe restrictions on political opponents in Korea itself.

More Agents Reported Here

The anti-Park Koreans, who have mounted a counterintelligence operation against the Korean Central Intelligence Agency to find out who is watching them, report that the number of the agency's officers under official cover here has grown from about 5 in 1971 to about 25 today.

Ten of those officers, headed by Maj. Gen. Kim Yung Hwan of the Korean Air Force, are on duty at the Korean Embassy here, five are in the consulate in Los Angeles, site of a fast-growing Korean community, and others are in big cities around the nation.

In addition, at least two senior undercover agents were said to watch Korean residents in New York and Los Angeles. One was reported to be Son In Duk, who was a Korean Central Intelligence Agency officer in Washington, then at the South Korean observer mission at the United Nations in New York. Korean residents in this country said that he went back to Korea in early 1974 but returned to New York later that year without official cover.

Another senior agent was reported to be Kim Ki Whan, also known as Kim Jaw Kwon, who was the the agency's station chief in Tokyo when Kim Dae Jung, who ran against President Park in the 1971 presidential elections, was kidnapped and spirited to Seoul in 1973.

Kim Ki Whan was said to have disap- [illegible] in the political turmoil that followed the kidnapping but to have reappeared in Los Angeles in 1975.

[illegible] Koreans reported that the intelligence agency had cut down on the sort of harassment it was warned by the State Department in 1973. But Koreans who attended a meeting in Los Angeles last August said they still get phone calls in the middle of the night.

"They just call and wait a minute and hang up," one said. "They don't say anything. They don't have to. They just want you to know they're still out there."

Plan to Rent Apartments on 42d St. To Theater People Draws Criticism

By GLENN FOWLER

A proposal by the Beame administration to salvage the unrented Manhattan Plaza housing complex on West 42d Street by using Federal subsidies to allow members of the performing arts to rent most of the 1,600 apartments was attacked last night by realty interests and residents of the Clinton neighborhood.

Albert A. Walsh, a former City Housing and Development Administrator now serving as a consultant to the Broadway Association and the League of New York Theaters, said at a public hearing that the plan would violate Federal and state civil-rights laws.

The city has obtained a commitment from Washington for $11.5 million of scarce subsidy money under Section 8 of the National Housing Act to aid the troubled middle-income project.

"If anyone says he can deliver those subsidies, he's deceiving you," Mr. Walsh told the audience of 600 neighborhood residents and theater people in the basement of the Holy Cross Roman Catholic Church. The church is a block east of the nearly completed housing project, where the hearing was held by Community Board 4. The project is between Ninth and 10th Avenues.

Project Defended

Mr. Walsh was disputed by Thomas Appleby, who became head of the housing administration three weks ago. Mr. Appleby said there was precedent in reserving subsidized middle-income apartments for employees of hospitals and educational institutions, as well as for such groups as the elderly and the handicapped.

Mr. Appleby and Victor Marrero, the chairman of the City Planning Commission, sought to convince members of the Clinton community that they would have a substantial voice in how the project was run. This was greeted with skepticism by members of the community board and by others, who feared that area residents not connected with the performing arts would not qualify for subsidized apartments in Manhattan Plaza.

The project was built by the HRH Construction Corporation, headed by Richard Ravitch, with the hope that it would attract upper-middle-income families to the area west of Times Square at rentals averaging $150 a room per month. But the renting program failed.

A study by the Housing Settlement Fund, a nonprofit organization, concluded that renting to the theatrical community would be feasible, provided that subsidies could bring the rental down to 25 percent of tenants' income. The housing administration concurred and, with the cooperation of Actor's Equity and the American Guild of Variety Artists, arranged for tenants to be certified by the city's Cultural Affairs Commission.

LEAFLETS OF GUN CLUB CALLED LITTER BY BOSTON

BOSTON, Oct. 28 (AP)—Dropping 125,000 leaflets from a plane over Boston is "no more or less than the exercise of the First Amendment right of free speech," the head of a gun club said today.

But city officials had another word for it: littering.

Michael Ciaramella, president of the Mystic Valley Gun Club, defended his group's dropping of leaflets that criticize an election referendum question that would ban the private ownership of handguns. The gun club dropped the leaflets over Government Center yesterday.

A spokesman for the Boston Police Department said that legal action would be taken against the Malden club for the cost of cleaning up the handbills.

"Leafletting is not littering if you place it in the recipients' hands," said Herbert Gleason, the city's corporation counsel. "But this has no conformity with allowed practices."

...n arrived at the camp ...ons, about 10:30 A.M. ...ne of his daughters.

In the months following the Watergate coverup trial, Mr. Ehrlichman seemed to change, living in a small adobe house in Sante Fe, N.M., writing a novel and in the most visible change from his White House days, growing a thick dark beard. When he arrived at the camp, he was clean shaven, apparently aware that Federal prison regulations prohibit beards.

No Special Arrangements

Camp officials had known for weeks that Mr. Ehrlichman, when and if he entered prison, would be going to Stafford. Washington officials notified the prison that he would arrive by noon. John T. Hadden, the warden, said that no special arrangements had been made.

"We're going to make an effort to treat him no better or no worse than anyone else," Mr. Hadden said by telephone.

Mr. Hadden noted that "in all reality, of course, it's not like any one else." But "we have to, and we will," treat him like others.

"The initial impression from the staff is, that's the wa yhe wants it," Mr. Hadden added.

The camp is designed somewhat like a campus with dormitories rather than cellblocks. There are no bars and no walls or fences.

Minimum security camps are generally for short term. At Safford, Mr. Hadden said, the majority are Mexican nationals convicted of entering the country illegally or drug offenses.

A spokesman for the Bureau of Prisons was asked why Mr. Ehrlichman was entitled to the relative leniency of a prison camp rather than a prison. He said that the former Nixon official had met the necessary qualifications—he was a "first offender," had not committed "crimes of violence" and was in no way a security risk.

The camp has a glove factory in which inmates may work. It is a popular assignment—all inmates mostly do some type of work—and there is a waiting list of about 500.

Assigned to a Dormitory

Safford also has a few separate rooms besides the 50-man dormitories, but there is a waiting list for them too. Mr. Hadden said that Mr. Ehlichman had been assigned to a dormitory.

The United States Court of Appeals upheld Mr. Ehlichman's conviction in the plumbers case last spring. Last month Mr. Ehrlichman asked the Supreme Court for a review. The trial judge in the case, Gerhard A. Gesell, had initially ordered Mr. Ehrlichman to surrender for his imprisonment in September, but because of his appeal he was allowed to remain free pending the Supreme Court's action.

Two weeks ago the appeals court also affirmed the coverup conviction. Mr. Ehrlichman has said he will appeal this as well.

The Supreme Court has refused to review several other criminal convictions in the Watergate scandal and is not expected to review the Ehrlichman case. Presumably, the Court's pattern was a factor in Mr. Ehrlichman's decision to surrender today.

If the Court should agree to review the cases, he undoubtedly would be able to be released at least temporarily pending arguments in the case and the final decision. However, because he voluntarily gave up his right to remain free pending appeal, he presumably would not be able to assert that his imprisonment was improper.

5 Myths

Things are never quiet for the leader in any field. Whispers abound and what starts as idle chatter eventually becomes unarguable fact. Take, for instance, some of the curious myths which have grown up around the Steinway.®

Myth #1. It's too expensive.

A comparison of price lists will surprise you. Some other makes are actually higher priced. Still, first cost is no true measure of the real cost of a Steinway or any other piano. Remember depreciation, and that a Steinway suffers less of it than other pianos. Think about maintenance, and the fact that your Steinway will perform better, longer, between service calls than a lesser instrument. And, of course, the Steinway's sensitive touch and sheer musicality can be purchased nowhere else, regardless of price. In fact, a Steinway turns out to be the least expensive piano you can buy because it is the best investment.

Myth #2. You're paying for the name.

Actually, you're paying for the instrument behind it. An instrument which is the product of over a century's innovation and development. An instrument with features found in no other piano. An instrument built with fantastic precision, as no other piano is built today. An instrument which if there were no name at all on the fall board would still be the ultimate piano.

Myth #3. They're asking a lot for a piece of furniture.

Steinway cabinetwork and finish are breathtaking. But what you're buying is hardly a piece of furniture (see Myth #2).

Myth #4. Today it's big business. The personal touch is gone.

Today every Steinway piano is still an individually hand built instrument. The craft has hardly changed in the past hundred years, so that in 1977 Steinway will complete virtually the same number of instruments as in 1877. And today Steinway pianos are still built under the personal supervision of the Steinway family as they have been for 123 consecutive years.

Myth #5. A piano is a piano.

All modern pianos now share design principles which were pioneered by Steinway. But from soundboard to action rail to the fine details of fit and finish, the Steinway still contains much that is unique. It is these details and features which make the difference between a Steinway and everything else.

So much for 5 myths.

In Geneva Atmosphere, a Heavy Overcast of Old Suspici

By BERNARD WEINRAUB
Special to The New York Times

GENEVA, Oct. 28—Hours before the white Rhodesian and four black African nationalist delegations trooped into the main council chamber of the Palais des Nations and took separate tables, Ivor Richard, Britain's chief delegate to the United Nations, observed bluntly that the Rhodesia conference here faced some delicate and extraordinarily difficult problems.

News Analysis

"I think the main single problem is the enormous depth of suspicion that there is between the two sides," said Mr. Richard, who is presiding over the conference that opened today. "This is understandable," he said. "One sees it, one feels it. You can almost feel it in the air around this building and around this town."

Mr. Richard's comment was vividly underscored when two of the key nationalist leaders abruptly delayed the conference for two hours to repeat several demands, among them that Mr. Richard be replaced by a British Cabinet minister with political muscle.

A Seeming Irrelevancy

Such a step, the Africans maintain, would guarantee Britain's responsibility for the transfer of power in Rhodesia and would erase fears that Mr. Richard, as a diplomat, was merely serving as a referee between Prime Minister Ian D. Smith and the nationalists.

To Western diplomats this issue, like several issues in the Rhodesian tangle, seemed pointedly irrelevant, almost implausible in the face of what was at stake: the end of white-minority rule in Rhodesia, the creation of a temporary biracial government and the handover of control, within two years, to the black majority.

Yet it is also evident that the rhetoric and posturing over the last week of preparatory talks has been blurred by genuine and deep-seated fears, on the white and black sides alike, of betrayal and deception.

Stubbornly clinging to hard positions, both sides are not merely engaging in brinkmanship, African style; they are, according to diplomats, underlining their own hostility to one another and their ambivalence and confusion at the plan advanced by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and announced last month by Prime Minister Smith.

Diffusion of Participants

The role-playing and jockeying for power is compounded here by Britain's initial reluctance to play a forceful role in the talks, despite the British colonial responsibility in Rhodesia, and by the array of performers strolling into the conference.

In other British negotiations since Rhodesia broke colonial ties 11 years ago, rather than accept black-majority rule, there has been only one other participant—the Salisbury Government ruled by Mr. Smith's party, the Rhodesian Front.

Now there is Mr. Smith, there are four African delegations that seem to disagree on virtually everything except their yearning for majority rule, there are observers from four African front-line states neighboring Rhodesia. And there is the shadow of Mr. Kissinger, who managed to bring them all together, but whose so-called package agreement left numerous loose strands.

What seems at issue in the conference appears deceptively simple. Mr. Smith, who agreed under South African pressure to arrange a transition to black-majority rule, wants the best possible terms for the 270,000 whites in Rhodesia. He wants an end to guerrilla activity and the assurance of a black government that would guarantee the property and financial rights of whites.

Domination by Smith Feared

The nationalists, representing the 6 million Rhodesian blacks, agree that the biracial interim government is necessary to draw up a constitution and legislation for a permanent government. But the blacks emphasize that there must be an effective transfer of political and administrative power to black Africans in the interim government.

And their overriding fear—indeed the key to their hard-line public stance—is that Mr. Smith will seek to control the transition process and thus play a dominant role in a permanent Rhodesian government.

This is why the nationalists totally reject his insistence that the Defense and Law and Order Ministries must be held by whites, and this is why the so-called Kissinger package, as announced by Mr. Smith, appears to be unraveling now.

Mr. Smith insists that he "accepted" the Kissinger plan only after h confirmation" from the Secreta that the front-line African pre agreed to his demand for the portfolios in Defense and Law The African presidents and t ists have denied this.

Black Delegates to Rhodesia Talks Find Geneva Style Hard on F

By JOHN F. BURNS
Special to The New York Times

GENEVA, Oct. 28—When black nationalists talk of a British settlement of accounts on Rhodesia, they have in mind more than the transfer of power from whites to blacks. They also worry about $57 rooms and $1.15 cups of coffee at the Inter-Continental Hotel, where many delegates are staying.

"This is a city for tourists, not for freedom fighters," said Saul Ndlovu, an aide to Joshua Nkomo, as he relaxed in a room with a panoramic view of Lake Geneva and the Alps beyond. "As things stand, we find it rather difficult to buy even a casual cup of coffee."

In selecting Geneva as the site for the Rhodesia conference, Britain compromised between nationalist pressure for a black African setting and Prime Minister Ian D. Smith's preference for a Rhodesian location. The choice is popular with the 350 journalists covering the talks, but not with many of the 160 or so delegates, white and black.

For the British the main attraction was the conference facilities at the Palais des Nations, European headquarters of the United Nations. Apparently the Foreign Office discounted the expense problems associated with gathering in one of the Continent's more sophisticated cities.

The 125 nationalists, ranging from lawyers who favor British tailoring to guerrilla fighters fresh from the subtropical forests of Mozambique, insist that they are not able to pay the bills. Even Mr. Smith, who has a foreign-exchange crisis on his hands at home, has been grumbling about the cost of supporting his 36-member party.

With the nationalists divided among themselves and at odds with the Rhodesians on the political issues, about all that unites the delegates is their insistence that Britain pay more of the costs. The nationalists have formally demanded that it meet all delegate expenses, instead of the $83 a day it has pledged for each of the first nine members in each of the five groups.

Britain, struggling to prop up the pound, which buys less abroad, has demurred. While hoteliers worry about unpaid bills, some nationalists have suggested that the United States step in. Said one delegate: "If Kissinger had $2 billion to compensate Rhodesian whites for their land, he can surely afford a few thousand to help us eat."

While some nationalists were busy lamenting the economic plight of the British, one of their leaders sought to turn the problem to political account. Arriving at the Inter-Continental after his archrivals, Mr. Nkomo and Robert Mugabe, were already ensconced in suites, Bishop Abel Muzorewa announced that he would stay somewhere less expensive.

With pointed comments about not living in luxury while many of the six million Rhodesian blacks subsist in poverty, the Methodist clergyman took his 34 delegates to the unpretentious Continental Hotel, where the rooms are $18 a day. The hotel is in the heart of the red-light district, with miniskirted women at every corner.

Even if the delegates had the money, it seems doubtful that they would sample the pleasures of this once-puritani- cal city. "We're here to political struggle, not to selves," said a sober-face as he moved along a cor Inter-Continental with a p mimeographed denunciati Smith.

Geneva Conference at a Glance

Purpose—Called by Britain to work out a temporary biracial government in Rhodesia that would lead to black majority rule in the former British colony within two years.

Chairman—Ivor Richard, Britain's representative at the United Nations.

Key Participants — The Rhodesian Government delegation is headed by Prime Minister Ian D. Smith, who led Rhodesia into declaring its independence in 1965 rather than accepting London's insistence on black majority rule. The 57-year-old Prime Minister, a pilot in World War II, helped found the Rhodesia Front Party, which won national elections in 1962 on a "white rights" platform. Mr. Smith became head of the government two years later. He has a reputation as a stubborn, tough and, to his enemies, slippery politician.

There are four black nationalist delegations. The leaders are:

Joshua Nkomo, a well-known and respected veteran of the nationalist movement, heads the delegation of the Zimbabwe African People's Union, one of the mainstream liberation movements in Rhodesia, which is called Zimbabwe by nationalists. The burly 59-year-old former trade union leader has spent 11 years in various forms of detention, was a founding member of the African National Council in 1952 and now heads one faction of the council. Mr. Nkomo held abortive negotiations with Mr. Smith earlier this year.

Bishop Abel Muzorewa, head of another faction of the African National Council, is Mr. Nkomo's chief rival for the support of Africans within Rhodesia. Although his opponents call him inexperienced and vague, Bishop Muzorewa commands a well-organized political structure in Rhodesia. The mild-mannered American-educated cleric is the first black Methodist bishop of Rhodesia.

Robert Mugabe, a 51-year-old radical socialist schoolteacher who has influence among the guerrilla fighters of the Mozambique-based Zimbabwe People's Army, claims leadership of the Zimbabwe African National Union. He spent 10 years in jail until December 1974, and recently formed a loose alliance with Mr. Nkomo in an effort to merge some of the political and military elements on the nationalist side.

The Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole, a 56-year-old Methodist minister, was originally one of Mr. Nkomo's lieutenants and broke away to found the Zimbabwe African National Union. Although Mr. Sithole enjoys some support in Rhodesia among the Shona-speaking people—the majority tribe in Rhodesia—his prestige has waned. He recently declared himself leader of the organization, but this is disputed by Mr. Mugabe.

The Issues—Whether power should be transferred to Rhodesia's black majority according to the proposals made by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and outlined by Mr. Smith in Salisbury last month. These call for the establishment of a multiracial council of state supervising an interim government, white control of the army and police, an end to economic sanctions against Rhodesia and an end to the guerrilla war there. Mr. Smith insists the proposals are not negotiable and have to be accepted or rejected as a whole.

The black factions maintain that the only acceptable points of the Kissinger plan are majority rule within two years and the formation of an interim government to replace Mr. Smith's all-white regime. Unresolved is the form the interim government should take, as well as who controls the handover process in the nation of 270,000 whites and six million blacks.

What the nationalists fear is that Mr. Smith will seek to retain white leverage in the handover process, thus cementing white power in Rhodesia.

touch was added when Bishop Abel Muzorewa, the 53-year-old Methodist who is chairman of the African National Council, a group formed to unite the Nkomo and Sithole factions, left vacant the seats on each side of him to symbolize the absence of two colleagues, one jailed, the other missing.

The diminutive Mr. Muzorewa, in his bishop's purple, was flanked at his table by two name cards, one for Enos Nkala, a jailed member of the central committee of the African National Council, and the other for Edson Sithole, the treasurer of the Nkomo group, who disappeared a year ago on the streets of Salisbury, the Rhodesian capital. Some nationalists say he was kidnapped and killed by opposing black groups; others say he was seized by the Rhodesian police.

Reminiscent of '73 Mideast Talks

The groups sat ranged around a hollow rectangle of table-desks, completed at the top end by a table for Mr. Richard and his aides. Each delegation had a table of its own, with Mr. Mugabe and Mr. Nkomo to Mr. Richard's left, the other nationalists to his right and Mr. Smith opposite him.

The choice of separate desks rather than a round table was similar to arrangements made here in December 1973 for delegates to the Middle East peace conference that followed the last Arab-Israeli war. Security was extremely tight, considering the vehemence of feelings between the sides represented here.

Chairman Seems Optimistic

Diplomats agree that Mr. Richard faces a formidable task in breaching the differences between the delegates, who have adopted opposing positions on the settlement proposals put before Mr. Smith by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger in Pretoria last month.

Mr. Smith insists that the proposals, guaranteeing a powerful role for whites in the transition period, are negotiable only in minor detail. The nationalists reject the proposals outright, accepting only the need for a transition government leading to majority rule within two years.

In a press briefing before the conference opened, Mr. Richard acknowledged the obstacles, but he also said that the conference was a "unique and historic occasion" since it brought all the parties to the Rhodesian dispute together for the first time.

"Merely to state that we are now pursuing the same goal, and that that goal is majority rule within two years, is to illustrate how much things have changed," the conference chairman said. "This conference would have been impossible until a few weeks ago."

Mr. Richard went from the briefing to an encounter with Mr. Nkomo and Mr. Mugabe at the British mission nearby, where the two nationalists pressed their demands for a stronger British role. They stuck firmly to the position staked out last night when they accused London of attempting to wreck the talks by refusing demands that Mr. Richard be replaced by a London Cabinet minister, and declining to acknowledge clearly the British responsibility in decolonization.

Mr. Richard was said to have resolved the impasse by agreeing, after contacts with top officials in London, to give the nationalists a written statement of Britain's view of its role here. The chairman told reporters that he had covered the issue in his opening remarks.

Mr. Richard's account suggested that he had stopped short of accepting the strong role demanded by the black leaders, who see British involvement as a means of guaranteeing that Mr. Smith does not renege on commitments made here or manipulate the transitional period to white advantage. He avoided questions bearing on British willingness to go beyond mediating.

The nationalists want Britain to treat this situation as it did in decolonizing its other territories in Africa.

However, Britain is reluctant to accept such a responsibility, in part because, with no physical presence in Rhodesia, it lacks the power commensurate to the responsibility. Also, since most of Rhodesia's whites are related to Britons, a direct role would carry political liabilities.

French Authority on Volcanoes Loses Post in Guadeloupe Dispute

PARIS, Oct. 28 (AP)—Haroun Tazieff, an authority on volcanoes, has been dismissed from his post as head of a study institute after a dispute over a Caribbean volcano that was supposed to have exploded with atomic force last summer, but whose eruption was far milder.

Claude Allegre, director of the Global Physics Institute, a branch of Paris University, said today that he had dismissed Dr. Tazieff as head of the institute's vulcanology service.

The 63-year-old Dr. Tazieff, who remains director of the National Center for Scientific Research, said he was dismissed because the institute considered that he left the island of Guadeloupe before all danger of an eruption by the volcano La Soufrière had passed. He told a reporter that he believed his dismissal was a "personal settling of scores."

Cancer Expert Urges New Effort To Reduce Hazard in Cigarettes

By HAROLD M. SCHMECK Jr.
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28—The hope of turning the United States quickly into a nonsmoking society is unrealistic, an officer of the National Cancer Institute said today, and therefore more attention should be paid to the development and use of less hazardous cigarettes.

Such a shift to less hazardous cigarettes is already taking place and can be carried further within the possibilities of modern technology, said Dr. Gio B. Gori. He is deputy director of the institute's division of cancer cause and prevention.

"A rapid shift in general cigarette consumption patterns," said Dr. Gori, "could reduce the current epidemic proportions of smoking-related diseases to minimal levels in a few decades."

Illness Related Ills

At present, the scientist of the cancer institute said, about 90 percent of lung cancer is related to tobacco use—primarily cigarette smoking. He said about 30 percent of atherosclerosis, underlying cause of most heart disease, can be linked to tobacco; 75 percent of chronic bronchitis, and 80 percent of emphysema.

Dr. Gori said, however, that "critical" amounts of such hazardous components of cigarette smoke as "tar," nicotine and carbon monoxide could be calculated and cigarettes could be designed to stay below those critical levels.

The average cigarette available to the consumer could have these desirable characteristics in a decade if manufacturers made a concerted effort by 1980 and continued to make improvements thereafter, he said.

There would be a time lag in the benefits from such an effort, he said, but the excess risk of illness and death caused by cigarette smoking would begin to decline by about 1985 and could continue downward until the year 2008, at which point the health risks of the smoking population would be almost indistinguishable from those of nonsmokers.

Dr. Gori said this trend would translate into substantial declines in mortality among cigarette smokers.

"By 2008 then, we have the potential to save 300,000 to 600,000 premature deaths every year," he said.

"Thus," said Dr. Gori, "the single most important and potentially successful disease prevention opportunity in contemporary society can be set in motion by responsible marketing decisions in the cigarette industry and, to a less controllable extent, through a major public education drive and legislative measures leading smokers to new patterns of acceptance.

Speaks at Symposium

Dr. Gori spoke at a symposium on smoking and disease at the annual meeting of the institute of Medicine of the National Academy of Sciences. Some of the comments made by other scientists in the discussion period after Dr. Gori's talk indicated that his call for emphasis on less-hazardous cigarettes would be somewhat controversial.

One speaker suggested that such a policy might simply play into the hands of the tobacco industry and dilute efforts to persuade Americans that they should stop smoking altogether.

While Federal health agencies and the American Cancer Society favor trends toward less-hazardous cigarettes, they have put much greater emphasis on efforts to discourage the smoking habit. The cancer institute is the Federal Government's main agency for research on cancer and cancer education and control. The cancer society, a nongovernment organization, has for years led the fight to convince Americans that cigarette smoking is dangerous to health.

Dr. Gori said that between 50 million and 60 million Americans are cigarette smokers even though there was some reduction in the smoking habit following the Surgeon General's report on the health consequences of smoking in 1964. The cancer institute official said the current gross consumption of cigarettes was over 600 billion a year.

While efforts against smoking have failed to eliminate the habit, he said, these efforts have clearly resulted in the manufacture and consumption of somewhat less hazardous cigarettes.

Tar yield of today's cigarettes is about one third that delivered in 1955 products, the scientist said, and nicotine levels have decreased by one-half. The average pre-1960 cigarette delivered 43 milligrams of tar, 3 milligrams of nicotine and 23 milligrams of carbon monoxide, according to the scientist's figures.

Abolishing tobacco use altogether is impractical at present, Dr. Gori said.

"Therefore," he added, "it is important that we protect those people who continue to smoke despite all warnings. Leaving them to their fate is neither humane nor economical."

Sears Will Cease Banning Competition In Shopping Centers

CHICAGO, Oct. 28 (Reuters)—Sears, Roebuck & Company has agreed to end its practice of refusing space in shopping centers to tenants who would offer it strong competition, the Federal Trade Commission said today.

The commission said Sears had signed a consent order to settle its complaint of conspiracy to restrict trade.

Sears, a major tenant in more than 265 shopping centers around the country, is sole owner of 16 others and part owner of five more.

The complaint alleged that prospective tenants who would strongly compete with Sears were excluded from shopping centers, as were tenants who would offer merchandise at discount prices.

Sears, in a statement issued at its headquarters here, said that such practices had been followed industrywide for more than 25 years and accused the commission of "selective enforcement" of new policies.

The complaint also alleged that Sears agreed with other shopping center tenants to maintain, control and fix prices, fashions and the quality of goods in centers.

Sears said that this allegation was "highly misleading" and was based on language in shopping center leases that "established the use of leased space by, for example, a 'popular price' dress shop or a 'high fashion' dress shop." The company said that it did not believe such language constituted price fixing.

The commission earlier this month reached a similar settlement with Sears on a complaint about the alleged use of "bait and switch" tactics in the sale of large household appliances.

Ex-Head of Navajo Housing Authority and 2 Indicted

By GRACE LICHTENSTEIN
Special to The New York Times

PHOENIX, Oct. 28—The former head of the Navajo Housing Authority and two other men were indicted today by a Federal grand jury on charges of misapplication of funds and conspiracy in connection with $15 million earmarked for housing on the largest Indian reservation in the country.

The eight-count indictment charged that Pat Chee Miller, former executive director of the housing authority, had taken $42,322 in kickbacks from a California investment company that he had chosen to manage the money, which had come from the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

The investment company, the American Funding Corporation, is now in receivership because it was unable to produce some of the Navajo money in cash on demand. A. Gordon Eldred, an officer of the company, and Mervin B. Schaffer, a business associate of Mr. Eldred, were indicted along with Mr. Miller.

The indictments are the latest in a series stemming from a Justice Department investigation of alleged corruption on the Navajo reservation. The reservation spreads across 25,000 square miles of Arizona, New Mexico and Utah.

Of the 11 persons indicted thus far, eight are Navajos. One was an assistant to the tribal president, Peter MacDonald. The investigation is being carried out under the direction of the United States Attorney for Arizona, William C. Smitherman. It has caused considerable discontent among the 150,000 Navajos, including many who feel that Mr. MacDonald holds dictatorial control over the reservation.

According to published reports, another Federal grand jury in Alberquerque is also looking into the financial dealings of some of the Navajo agencies that operate in the New Mexico part of the reservation.

According to the indictment today, Mr. Miller agreed to invest the $15 million in housing money through American Funding in exchange for kickbacks that Mr. Miller, Mr. Eldred, Mr. Schaffer and another man allegedly shared. The first investment was made in 1974 by the housing authority, an independent body set up by the Navajo tribe to build low-cost housing with Federal aid.

Mr. Miller got no receipt for the money, nor did he ask where it would be invested or for how long. H.U.D. officials later said that the investment was a violation of the Federal agency's contract, which required that these funds be put only in short term bank obligations.

The housing authority sued American Funding when the company could not produce some of the money. It was then learned that some of the Navajo money had been invested in a Las Vegas gambling house. These disclosures led to Mr. Miller's resignation and to tighter controls by H.U.D. over its money on the Navajo reservation.

The housing authority is not the only agency on the reservation with money problems. An outside accountant, hired at the request of tribal legislators, reported in July that some of the tribal enterprises "are financial and operational disasters." He urged that the tribe appoint a full-time staff to oversee its finances.

F.A.A. Aide Is Chided for Acting On Jumbo Jets Before Consulting

By RICHARD WITKIN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28—The head of the Federal Aviation Administration chided a subordinate today for not consulting him before extending the deadline for modifying jumbo jet airliners so they could survive the type of pressure loss that led to the DC-10 crash near Paris in 1974.

The official, Dr. John L. McLucas, said he was reviewing his subordinate's action but would not necessarily overrule it.

Dr. McLucas also left open the possibility that the extra time might be allowed at least for modifying Boeing 747's because their control cables were less vulnerable than those of other jumbos.

Postponement of the deadline—from Dec. 31, 1977, to the same date a year later—caused a stir among safety experts because the airline request was based in large part on a contention that the delay would save $14.5 million.

The issue was raised as to whether it was wise to put off a design improvement to save that amount of money, especially since the extra outlay would be shared by all jumbo-jet operators.

Queried on Postponement

The head of the National Transportation Safety Board, Webster B. Todd Jr., promptly wrote Dr. McLucas asking several questions about the status of the changes to the jumbos. He also asked "what additional information can you provide . . . to assist in our understanding the rationale underlying" postponement of the deadline.

Dr. McLucas, meeting with newsmen at a breakfast session, said the delay had been granted by J. A. Ferrarese, then acting director of the F.A.A.'s Flight Standard Service, because "he judged the reasons adequate."

"It was done," the F.A.A. chief continued, "by a guy who thought he had the authority. We'll give it more review though the order is out. It is a question of judgment whether a change is significant enough that he should notify the boss. This is one where I think he should have, and he didn't."

The occasion was used by Dr. McLucas to make public some of the figures that the safety board had requested on the current timetable of the airlines in completing the modifications ordered by the F.A.A.

Of the 317 United States jumbo jets affected, he said, 219 were scheduled to have all the changes completed by the original deadline. The figure covered 48 of the 109 Boeing 747's, 63 of the 83 Lockheed L-1011's, and 108 of the 125 DC-10's.

It appeared that these figures were a little out of date since two airline spokesmen said their companies now planned to complete more of the changes by the original deadline than were accounted for in Dr. McLucas's report.

What was clear, in any case, was that the greatest number of proposed delays involved the 747—the jumbo that was least vulnerable.

Foreign airlines are not bound by orders of this country's aviation agency but customarily follow the United States lead.

The 1974 crash that generated the design changes involved a Turkish plane on a Paris-to-London flight. All 346 on board were killed—the worst airplane death toll in history.

The fatal events began when the rear cargo door was blown out by the build-up in air pressure inside. The ensuing sudden pressure loss caused the floor of the still-pressurized passenger cabin to collapse into the depressurized cargo hold, and this crippled vital control cables running from cockpit to tail.

Many changes have been made to the cargo door. The additional changes for all jumbos—the changes involved in the deadline postponement—were ordered on the theory that a pressure loss can be caused in other ways—by a bomb, a disintegrating engine, or a collision. The changes call for strengthening passenger floors and installing vents to prevent a catastrophic pressure differential between cabin and cargo hold.

Striking Pilots Volunteer Service

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 28 (UPI)—Striking Continental Airline pilots are volunteering to fly two flights each week on the airline's Micronesian Islands route because the service is "the very lifeline" of the South Pacific Islands, pilots said today. A spokesman for the Airline Pilots Association said that pilots had made the decision because of "humanitarian reasons" since Continental has the only air passenger service to the Micronesian Islands.

Court-Ordered Halt In Putting Taconite Into Lake Is Upheld

ST. PAUL, Oct. 28 (AP)—The United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit upheld today a July 7, 1977, deadline for the Reserve Mining Company to halt discharges of taconite tailings into Lake Superior. But the court suggested that the deadline might be extended if there were "changed circumstances."

The court also affirmed $1 million in fines and penalties imposed on Reserve by Federal District Judge Edward J. Devitt.

The company had appealed Judge Devitt's order of last July, which began a one-year period for Reserve to halt discharges from its taconite processing plant at Silver Bay, Minn. The appellate court heard arguments on the appeal Oct. 13.

The higher court had set the one-year period in an earlier case, declaring that the time would begin when Reserve and the State of Minnesota had broken off negotiations for a disposal site on land.

Dispute on Land Disposal

The appeals court said that Judge Devitt had properly interpreted what was meant by the one-year shutdown period, and asserted:

"We add that caveat. The parties have recognized in oral argument, as we also recognize, that under changed circumstances, such as, for example, resolution of the on-land disposal controversy by agreement or through litigation in state court, appellants and other parties are not barred from seeking modification of the closure order from the district court."

The Federal judges took no position on a new round of battling scheduled to begin in state court in Duluth next Monday. In that case, Reserve will introduce new testimony and evidence in an effort to win state approval for a disposal site designated Milepost 7.

Reserve has agreed to build a tailings dump at that location, near Silver Bay, but state officials want the company to go farther inland to a site known as Milepost 20.

The Minnesota Pollution Control Agency and the Minnesota Department of Natural Resources have rejected the Milepost 20 site, contending that it could result in the blowing of asbestos-laden dust and the construction of possibly unsafe dams.

The central issue in the long dispute is that taconite wastes contain asbetos-like particles that may cause cancer. The appeals court has held that the discharge into Lake Superior is a potential health hazard and must be halted.

In the state court action, Reserve will attempt to prove that the Pollution Control Agency and the Department of Natural Resources had a bias against Milepost 7 and did not fairly weigh the merits of the site.

The appeals court decision was written by Judge Myron Bright, one of the five judges who heard arguments 15 days ago.

In an order last May 5, Judge Devitt fined Reserve $837,500 for violating state water discharge permits. He also assessed attorneys' fees and costs of $200,000, to be shared by Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan and environmental groups that brought suit against Reserve.

The appeals court rejected Minnesota's request for a larger penalty.

Carter Sweep of South Is in Doubt As Two States Lean Toward Ford

By ROY REED
Special to The New York Times

ATLANTA, Oct. 28—Contrary to early assumptions, Jimmy Carter could lose some Southern states in next Tuesday's election, according to political specialists in the region.

They say Virginia and Louisiana are leaning toward President Ford. Mississippi observers predict a close race there and sources in Texas say that Mr. Ford is gaining and could overtake Mr. Carter in that state.

A wide lead that Mr. Carter enjoyed in North Carolina early in the campaign has reportedly eroded so badly that alarmed Democrats are rolling out "the big guns" such as former Senator Sam J. Ervin Jr. to stop it. The effort is expected to succeed.

State and local Democratic officials in several states have become noticeably more active for the Carter-Mondale ticket in recent days as they have become less certain of their early presumption that the former Governor of Georgia would sweep all the states of the old confederacy.

Some see a touch of irony in the fact that Mr. Carter's fortunes in several Southern states now rest squarely on the black vote. Whether it turns out in large numbers could make a vital difference in several states. Black voters are believed to favor Mr. Carter overwhelmingly.

It is now a foregone conclusion that a majority of well-to-do white middle-class suburbanites in Dixie will vote with their counterparts elsewhere—Republican.

The Democrat appears to have lost some of his rural support in this region. Rich farmers in northern Louisiana, for example, speak with satisfaction of the agricultural record of the Ford Administration. Northern Louisiana has voted Republican in the last several Presidential elections.

A Ku Klux Klan leaflet distributed recently in rural northwestern Louisiana described Mr. Carter as the illegitimate son of Rose Kennedy, the Massachusetts matriarch.

The leaflet was not taken seriously by many Louisianians except as a reminder of the deep suspicion of any liberal, regardless of his origins, that still exists in much of the rural South.

The Carter slippage in the South seems to reflect in part the success of the Republican campaign to portray him as a typical liberal Democrat.

Clarke Reed, chairman of the Mississippi Republican Party, tells audiences that he was happy to see Senator Walter F. Mondale of Minnesota named as Mr. Carter's running mate because it illustrated clearly the Georgian's liberal ideology.

He has been damaged by the apparent enthusiasm with which he was embraced by national labor leaders.

An editorial cartoon in The New Orleans Times-Picayune last Sunday showed a midget-sized Jimmy Carter sitting on the knee of George Meany, president of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations. Mr. Carter is smiling and saying, "Trust me." Organized labor has less credibility in the South than in other sections.

To Emphasize Texas

The Carter strategy has presumed a fairly solid base in his home region. He could lose two or three of the smaller Southern states without real damage. Texas with its 26 electoral votes is another matter.

The Carter camp's concern over Texas is illustrated by his travel schedule this week. He will go there Saturday, the third day from the election, and stay until Sunday.

He will campaign especially hard in south Texas, where Mexican-Americans are most populous. Observers say that Mr. Carter has not "turned on" Mexican-Americans as much as John F. Kennedy did. Unlike the 1960 Presidential campaign, there are no "Viva Carter" clubs this year in Texas.

Mark White, the Democratic Secretary of State in Texas, today predicted a record turnout of 3.5 million voters. He said he thought the election would be close but that Mr. Carter would carry Texas by 3 percentage points.

John B. Connally, the former Texas Governor, who switched to the Republican Party, said earlier this week that he thought Mr. Ford moved slightly into the lead in Texas.

Black voter organizations across the South have begun to show more activity for the Democratic ticket in the last few days, Charles Evers, the black Mayor of Fayette, Miss., again stated his support for Mr. Carter earlier this week. He had been considered a lukewarm supporter. Several other black leaders appeared by his side as he made his statement and appeal.

White Mississippi officials, including Senators James O. Eastland and John C. Stennis, also have gone to work seriously for Mr. Carter. Mr. Eastland for the first time in years is campaigning openly and earnestly for a Democratic Presidential ticket.

Governor Cliff Finch, Mississippi's populist Democratic Governor, gave little help beyond an endorsement until recent days. Faced with the prospect that Mr. Ford might gain enough to carry the state, Mr. Finch organized a joint news conference Monday of Mississippi's top Democratic officials to push for the Carter-Mondale ticket. It included Representatives William Bowen and Jamie Whitten as well as the two Senators.

It was considered significant that Mr. Stennis, chairman of the Senate Armed Forces Committee, said that Mr. Carter's pledge to cut the defense budget did not worry him. He said he felt the nominee would be sound on military matters.

Observers consider the race too close to call in Mississippi. Some in Texas feel the same way, although Carter campaign officials say they are confident that Texas will go Democratic.

The feeling among politicians and political reporters in Louisiana and Virginia is that both of those states are leaning toward Mr. Ford. Polls in the two states tend to confirm that.

Brilliance of Carter's Early Campaign Has Faded

and over President Ford this year. This is true because the organized labor movement, much of which sat out the 1972 campaign, is working massively and energetically for Mr. Carter now. The field force developed by the Carter organization itself is weak this year, but primarily because of stringent spending limits imposed by the new Federal campaign finance law.

However, Republicans, for the first time, are limited by law to the same level of spending—and they suffered deeper scars during the primary period than did the Democrats.

One old Democratic wise man, John Kenneth Galbraith, got a mimeographed form letter in response to an offer to help the Carter campaign, a step viewed by some as foolish and rude. But since Mr. Carter, from the start, was determined to reject or to drastically modify orthodox Democratic dogma on issues, it is hard to see how he could profitably have used help from such figures. Nor do the members of the Carter staff feel they needed advice from party regulars and veterans who, they note, lost both the 1968 and 1972 elections.

Another criticism revolves around Mr. Carter's handling of President Ford after his nomination.

In the primary elections campaigns Mr. Carter said repeatedly—and accurately—that "I am not running against anyone; I am running for President." As his Democratic rivals desperately tried to derail him by suggesting he was inconsistent, Mr. Carter largely ignored them.

Erred in Attacking Ford

He was, therefore, unpracticed and seemingly uncertain when it came time to run against an incumbent Republican President. "That was the least well-handled thing in the whole campaign—how we jabbed at Ford," remarked a top Carter strategist this week.

The same adviser refined the statement by saying, "The biggest mistake was attacking Ford so hard after the second debate. With the blunder he made on Poland if we had just let him stew in his own kettle there might have been a decisive break of voters to us that would have wrapped it up."

Instead, Mr. Carter was informed by his press secretary, Jody Powell, that rumors that Mr. Carter had once had a mistress had been planted with a columnist who was investigating them. Mr. Carter's temper boiled over, and he lashed out with attacks on Mr. Ford that many people saw as intemperate.

The Abortion Issue

Another serious problem for Mr. Carter was in the distractions that diverted attention from the political message he wished to impart and gave a sometimes frivolous color to his campaign or, in some cases, merely made it look as though he could not control events. Some of these distractions were his fault, but some were not.

On the second day of his formal campaign, Sept. 7, Mr. Carter was met in Scranton, Pa., by an extraordinarily large crowd of militant, nearly rowdy anti-abortion demonstrators. They not only soured his reception but, for a time, seemed to threaten even his physical safety. Nothing like that "pro-life" demonstration's intensity or size was ever seen again, but it seemed to encourage other anti-abortion demonstrations elsewhere for seven to 10 days and to encourage journalists to focus on Mr. Carter's "Catholic problem" and his difficulty with the "pro-life" forces.

Some of the distractions could be blamed only on the Carter campaign itself. In September, Mr. Carter set out from Penn Station on a one-day whistle-stop tour on a campaign railroad train that might have been a high point of his race.

But that morning journalists learned of and got copies of the now-celebrated Playboy magazine interview, in which Mr. Carter attempted to illustrate an argument that his own Southern Baptist religious views were benign for those with different faiths by saying he had lusted in his heart for women.

TV 'Destroying' Carter

By the time the train reached Pittsburgh that night the more than 200 journalists aboard were producing tens of thousands of words highly embarrassing to Mr. Carter and diverting attention from his political arguments.

The former Georgia Governor for several weeks stubbornly refused to concede error in either the forum or the form of what he had said. One of his close associates remarked this week, however, "The Playboy interview was a serious mistake, and there is no question that it hurt."

Some other wounds were also self-inflicted. In attempting to apologize for having said that President Lyndon B. Johnson had lied and cheated, Mr. Carter used language so sinuous that he seemed to be suggesting he had never made the remarks about Mr. Johnson or had not consciously meant to permit their publication. Most reporters described the event in unflattering terms—and ignored an effective political speech.

By that evening, Sept. 23, Mr. Carter seemed to be in a state of controlled, but anguished, desperation. He called a dozen newspaper and magazine reporters to a San Diego hotel suite to discuss his difficulties. The conversation proceeded even after the reporters warned they could not be in the position of "advising" a political candidate. Mr. Carter's words were, by agreement, off the record, but he has since released the reporters from that promise. Television coverage, he said quietly, was "destroying" him at that point in the campaign.

Mr. Carter did not, however, lapse into an embittered and fruitless feud with the press. At each low point in his campaign, Mr. Carter has by a visible act of will tried to forget the past and to direct the campaign back to a more serious and profitable direction.

Those efforts have not always been notably successful, and there are several reasons for this. Despite his sophistication in most aspects of politics, Mr. Carter has never seemed to grasp fully the fact that if he wishes on a given day to draw national attention to a major statement on an important issue he cannot also make a biting or catchy jibe at President Ford or react to a Presidential remark with an angry comment.

A sort of Gresham's Law of politics means that the latter will drive the former off the front page in nearly every case. Thus, repeatedly, some of Mr. Carter's most important statements have been buried under his own off-the-cuff comments, not the remarks of his opponents.

Acceptance Speech the High Point

But what may be the most important factor in the wavering and sometimes disappointing course of the campaign, is a subtle one about which there is not agreement. This is the image of himself that Mr. Carter has tried to create in the fall campaign.

Many people would say that the high point of Mr. Carter's political career was his acceptance speech at the national convention in which, with vast self-assurance, he seemed to offer a vision of social reform, saying love must be transformed into simple justice.

Although the written text of the speech contained few specific or firm promises, its populist tone—and his selection of a liberal purist as his Vice-Presidential running mate—won over much of the suspicious party hierarchy that had resisted and distrusted Mr. Carter.

Having achieved that considerable accomplishment, Mr. Carter and his closest Georgia advisers began to have second thoughts and doubts. Some private opinion polling conducted in late summer "really jerked us around," according to the campaign manager, Hamilton Jordan.

A feeling grew that a dangerous "misperception" of Mr. Carter had grown in the public consciousness—that he was seen as having become "too liberal" and of changing from an anti-establishment outsider to a creature of the old politics.

This was seen as being particularly dangerous for a sound reason. Mr. Carter's firmest base of support was in the Deep South, and he feels he understands that region's equivocal but in many ways conservative temper better than anyone else. This is one reason Mr. Carter quite deliberately sounded a more conservative note as he began his formal campaign in early September.

"If you think this campaign has problems," said a Carter confidant, "just consider what a fix any other Democratic candidate would be in. He wouldn't be sure of the South, and without it, Ford would be pretty likely to win."

Increasingly Cautious

Thus Mr. Carter began the campaign by emphasizing the need to achieve a balanced budget, to fight inflation and even to delay change or give it incrementally. In large part he returned to the non-ideological themes of "trust" and "competence" in government that had marked his spring campaign.

Mr. Carter also became extremely cautious. One example is illuminating. An adviser revealed this week that one reason he dropped a line of attack on President Ford's frequent vetoes of legislation was that, on reflection, this was felt to be "defending Congress," and as an anti-establishment outsider Mr. Carter did not want to be in that position.

Most of Mr. Carter's really close advisers seem convinced that, on balance, the careful, conservative tone was wise. They still shudder at the memory of how Senator George McGovern's humane liberalism fared in 1972. And one of them says of middle class, conservative voters, "I don't think we can just give the Republicans that field."

However, the decision to be bold—yet cautious—to be an "activist" but a "fiscal conservative"—seemed to leave Mr. Carter's campaign with no clearly defined, consistent or even wholly coherent theme. If it reassured some voters it may have failed to excite an even larger number. Should Mr. Carter lose he might be remembered not as having committed the sin of overconfidence but of being too cautious.

"We're going to win," said one of his inner circle. "And if we do this will be remembered as a smart campaign—a brilliant one, really. It's no small thing to knock off a sitting President."

CARTER HINTS A CUT IN TAX, BUT BARS VOW

about the same amount of total revenues but would increase the burden on the well-to-do or those who enjoy large tax shelters.

But Wednesday in Pittsburgh, during an appearance on a radio show called "The Loveable Fox" in which listeners call in questions, Mr. Carter said that his "top priority" would be to "not raise taxes." He added that there was "a much more likely prospect of some tax reduction in the next four years—I think that is almost inevitable."

When a reporter asked him later if he meant a general tax cut, and not just a shift in tax burden from poorer to more prosperous citizens, Mr. Carter reportedly said, "I would say that is true."

At a speech that night he also said that an increase in Government revenues caused by economic recovery from the recession could be used "partly for a substantial tax reduction, I would think."

Yesterday morning at the Erie, Pa., airport, Mr. Carter was asked to amplify his views on the subject. He said that if annual economic growth were raised to a rate of 5 to 6 percent, unemployment was cut to 4 percent and inflation was controlled, there would eventually be a total of $60-billion more Federal revenues available each year.

"I would say that a substantial portion of that would go for a tax cut, a substantial portion of that would go for implementing new programs; but the new programs would be very carefully phased in over that period to make sure that we do arrive with a balanced budget."

Questions on Significance

All of this left some journalists familiar with Mr. Carter's campaign uncertain of the significance of Mr. Carter's words, especially since he was not using a forum such as a major speech to discuss the question and seemed to be dropping only sketchy hints as to what he meant.

His press secretary, Jody Powell, said that Mr. Carter had not intended to inject a major new issue of tax reduction into the campaign, and Mr. Powell dismissed a suggestion that the remarks were meant to influence what may be a close election next Tuesday.

At midday at a large street rally in downtown Cleveland, Mr. Carter said, "I'm very careful about what I promise." He added that if "we can have just a normal relationship between Government spending and our normal spending we could realize enough income to have a combination of new programs and perhaps some tax cuts."

Mr. Carter added, "I'm very careful not to promise that for sure."

To some observers, the position seemed even less clear than before. Mr. Powell later told reporters: "It's not a proposal in the sense of a campaign promise. It's a statement in the way of a possibility or probability."

Mr. Carter's appearance at Hofstra also produced one of the rare jokes of his campaign. Mr. Carter told the crowd he had asked the local authorities to tell him the "single most serious crisis" facing Nassau County, and had learned that it was "how to find a replacement for Julius Erving for the New York Nets," the professional basketball team.

Several thousand people gathered at Carroll Square, in the waterfront area of Brooklyn, yesterday afternoon to hear Mr. Carter who on that occasion alluded to tax reform, but not to tax reduction.

Young Men on Fence

Daniel P. Moynihan, the Democratic Senatorial candidate, Governor Carey, Mayor Beame and other Democrats joined Mr. Carter on the platform as young men perched and climbed precariously on the woven wire fence surrounding the crowded park.

The rally was organized by the International Longshoremen's Association and the Seafarers' International Union. Paul Hall, president of the seafarers' union and Anthony Scotto, legislaive director and vice president of the longshoremen's association, spoke briefly.

Mayor Beame told the crowd that Mr. Carter would be elected and "we are no longer going to have a case where our city is degraded like under Ford."

A faulty microphone made it difficult for much of the crowd to hear Mr. Carter's voice, until an aide pressed forward with a portable loudspeaker.

Mr. Carter struck some of the same themes he employed earlier in the day before large rallies in Erie and Cleveland. One was to say that one source of resentment against the Ford Administration was that felt by middle-class Americans "who still have jobs" and who are the ones "that pay for welfare and unemployment compensation" for the unemployed. This burden would be lifted if there was full employment, Mr. Carter said.

Ford Now Leading Carter In California 46% to 43%, According to Field Poll

Special to The New York Times

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 28—President Ford leads Jimmy Carter, 46 to 43 percent, in a California Poll sampling released tonight by Mervin D. Field.

Mr. Field pointed out that this is the first time since both were nominated that the President had shown a significant statistical lead over his Democratic challenger in the California Poll.

The first sampling in August, when Mr. Ford was still locked in a fight with former Gov. Ronald Reagan for the Republican nomination, showed Mr. Carter 53 percent to 33 percent for Mr. Ford. In mid-September, the margin was 44-40 favoring Mr. Carter, and an opinion sampling Oct. 7-8 showed them virtually even at 44-43.

Mr. Field, who conducts the poll, said that 3 percent of the voters indicated they would write-in the name of Senator Eugene J. McCarthy, who was unable to win a ballot spot in California. Three percent more favored minor candidates, and 8 percent were undecided, Mr. Field said.

The poll was based on telephone interviews with 1,245 persons who said they would vote. The telephone calls were made between 3 and 9 P.M. on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Mr. Field also said that Senator John V. Tunney, a Democrat, had a slight lead over Dr. S. I. Hayakawa, his Republican challenger. The figures are 45 percent for Senator Tunney, 43 percent for Dr. Hayakawa and 12 percent undecided, Mr. Field said.

TV SPENDING RECORD IS SET BY FORD GROUP

Report Shows 3-Week Figure of $9.9 Million — Total Budget Increased to $12 Million

By WARREN WEAVER Jr.
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28—The President Ford Committee has already spent more money on campaign television advertising than has any other national candidate in political history, and the end has not arrived yet.

In its most recent campaign spending report, the committee listed more than $9.9 million in payments to the three major networks, 120 local television stations and Campaign '76, the in-house advertising agency that handles Ford media relations, from Sept. 26 to Oct. 18.

Royston C. Hughes, treasurer of the Ford campaign, reported in an interview that the campaign's television budget, which had been estimated at $6 million only six weeks ago, had been raised to $12 million, making it far and away the most expensive component of the Republican drive.

Record Set by Nixon

President Nixon set the current broadcast spending record of $7 million in 1972, but that figure covered some primary activity and the use of radio as well as television. His opponent, Senator George McGovern, spent about $5.8 million on broadcast advertising.

Television spending appeared to command an overwhelming share of Ford expenses, which the report listed as totaling $10.1 million during the 23-day period. However, the President's committee had about $1.5 million more in circulation that was obscured by a legal if confusing bookkeeping system.

Under the campaign law, Presidential candidates must submit a final report on their campaign finances 10 days before the election, stating their position as of five days earlier. No more information will be available until 30 days after the election.

The largest single item of television spending listed by the Ford committee, $7.4 million advanced to Campaign '76, will cover much of the budget for the remainder of the campaign, Mr. Hughes said, but some additional money may be forthcoming.

For Local Broadcasts

This week, the President began airing a series of half-hour pseudo-documentaries over local channels in states where he has been campaigning, combining scenes of his political activity with informal interviews by Joe Garagiola, the sportscaster.

The final pre-election report by the Ford committee disclosed a good deal about the shape of the Republican effort. More than $230,000 was paid to Northwest Orient Airlines for charter fees for Senator Robert J. Dole, the Vice-Presidential candidate, but only $1,960 to the Treasurer of the United States for political use of Air Force 1, the President's plane.

The committee's September report did not list any campaign spending by Republican surrogates, Cabinet members and other Administration officials making political appearances around the country on behalf of the Ford-Dole ticket.

Names and Figures

But some of their names and nominal spending figures began appearing in the pre-election report. Among these were Secretary of Commerce Elliot L. Richardson, $37; Susan Ford, $79; Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare F. David Mathews, $322; Secretary of Housing and Urban Development Carla Hills, $186; Virginia H. Knauer, consumer adviser to the President, $137, and L. William Seidman, special assistant to the President for economic affairs, $264.

The only substantial surrogates' expenses were $1,158 for travel by James T. Lynn, director of the Office of Management and Budget, and $6,987 for charter fees for Alan Greenspan, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers.

Rent for a Steamboat

Other sidelights on the Ford campaign gleaned from the report included the following:

¶It cost $23,320 to rent a steamboat for the President's appearance in New Orleans and $880 for an accompanying jazz band.

¶Petty cash outlays for the President Ford Committee for 23 days totaled over $4,800.

¶The campaign picked up a $300 parking bill for the Ford committee chairman, James A. Baker 3d, and his predecessor, Rogers C.B. Morton.

The most mysterious expense item in the report was $9 for "food" for unspecified persons at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel on Oct. 4.

Nominees Lift Voices to be Heard in the Land

They Vie on TV and Radio With Each Other and With Business Ads

By JOSEPH LELYVELD
Special to The New York Times

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 28—Everyone speaks of the media "blitz" that is supposedly being waged for the Presidential candidates in the campaign's closing days, but a media blitz is what happens to this country 365 days a year. In the din of the general bombardment, it is not easy for the candidates to be heard.

They must compete for attention not only with each other but also with scores of candidates for state and local offices who are attempting to use the same advertising formulas for their own purposes. They must also compete for attention with the makers of margarine, panty hose, denture cleansers and sleeping pills.

The question then is what finally comes across. What follows is a log kept by one bleary-eyed viewer who made himself the target of as many messages as could be gathered in two days from television and radio here in a busy media market that reaches into two closely contested states, Missouri and Illinois:

TUESDAY, 7:30 A.M.: Jimmy Carter is being pursued, in an interview on "CBS Morning News," on the question of what happened to his big lead in the polls. There is a commercial break for Avon products and Maytag washing machines; after that, he is still asked about the polls and why voters think he is evading issues. "You ask me a question about an issue, and I'll answer it," the candidate says. The next question is about the polls.

4:15 P.M.: On a radio call-in show called "Party Line" on WGNU, a woman is complaining about the campaign. "Oh, I think this is such a low campaign; I'm so upset," she says. "It's going to get a lot worse yet," the announcer tells her. "Mark my word. They're going to strike more low blows than you dreamed possible."

5:05 P.M.: "CBS Radio News" says that President Ford's campaign appearances in Chicago were chosen as "backdrops for his campaign production company," which was videotaping his appearances for use on a television show to be broadcast throughout Illinois. That point is not repeated when film of the same appearances is used a half-hour later on "CBS Evening News."

6:30 P.M.: A Ford spot on ABC showing nameless Georgians belittling the performance of their former Governor is followed by a commercial for Charles of the Ritz eyeshadow. On NBC, Joe Garagiola, cast in the role of Everyman, is "hosting" the half-hour Ford program. The baseball announcer has ridden on Air Force One. "What a thrill," he says, "for an old broken-down ex-Cub like me." Has he forgotten that the program is being shown in St. Louis? He also played for the Cardinals.

President Ford is shown landing. Then Mrs. Ford is shown landing. They kiss, not once, but four or five times. Next, there is footage of a crowd cheering Mr. Ford, which sets up Mr. Garagiola to say in a studio interview: "Mr. President, you are really getting with the crowds." The President says that he loves people.

"One-on-one thing?" asks the former catcher, who now seems to be pitching batting practice. "Yes, sir," the President replies.

The Ford show is competing with "To Tell the Truth" on ABC and the CBS game show called "Hollywood Squares," where a young woman wins a big cash prize by answering a question that has to do with the removal of two pine trees from the chest of George Washington on Mount Rushmore. As the Ford show ends, the Presidential seal fills the screen.

8 P.M.: Jimmy Carter, who never got to speak for longer than 20 seconds at a time on the evening news shows, has his first commercial of the evening, after one for a breakfast serial, Special K. He speaks about unemployment for 45 seconds. This followed by a couple embracing in bed, the opening scene of the ABC program, "Rich Man, Poor Man."

9:55 P.M.: Eugene J. McCarthy is on ABC and CBS simultaneously, saying what he would have said if he had been invited to the Television debates. Aquafresh, a toothpaste, is on NBC. Film of a 1968 McCarthy rally is shown, and the point is made that he is running without the Federal subsidies that the Democratic and Republican candidates get. An appeal is made for money. On NBC., Aquafresh is followed by Jimmy Carter.

10:30 P.M.: Joseph Teasdale, the Democratic candidate for Governor in Missouri, is shown in a library, looking pensive. As the tieless candidate skims a book, an announcer says that Mr. Teasdale "doesn't have all the answers, but he's patient." Next, there is a brass band playing the Ford theme song. A chorus sings. "I'm Feeling Good A... America."

How good America is feeling is the subject of Johnny Carson's monologue, which folows. He says that Mr. Carter's family gives him five sure votes, and Mr. Ford's family gives him four sure votes. "The rest of the country is undecided," he declares.

WEDNESDAY, 7:35 A.M.: Rosalynn Carter, who was on "Good Morning America" on ABC on Monday, appears on "Today" on NBC to answer the same questions about how much she will miss Plains, Ga., if she has to move to Washington and whether she fears her daughter Amy might be spoiled there.

3:30 P.M.: Vice President Rockefeller is on the Mike Douglas Show on CBS. Presumably, he is there to plug the President, but he seems to forget and talks sarcastically, instead, about Mr. Ford's first campaign manager, Howard Calloway. In a commercial break, Joseph Teasdale takes a walk in the woods and kicks the leaves.

4:55 P.M.: On CBS, there is dramatic footage in a Ford commercial of Japanese planes being shot down over the Pacific in World War II. The soundtrack seems to suggest that they were shot down by the young Gerald Ford.

5 P.M.: A film of Joan Mondale speaking to a black audience in East St. Louis is balanced on the local news programs by a film of a Ford campaign official visiting the premature infants ward of a hospital to make a point about abortion.

5:30 P.M.: Ann Landers is shown embracing and endorsing Jimmy Carter on "ABC Evening News." Cardinal Cooke shakes his hand, but doesn't endorse him.

6:15 P.M.: On WEW, a radio station specializing in country-Western music, a rendition of "Your Cheating Heart" is followed by a Ford commercial with the nameless Georgians again talking about Mr. Carter's unkept promises. The next song begins, "Touch My Heart, Feel the Pain."

6:30 P.M.: "To Tell The Truth" is not being shown on ABC. Instead, there is a half-hour Carter show that opens with film clips of ordinary citizens voicing doubts and disenchantment about the candidates and the political process in much the same vein as do the people in the Ford commercials. One big difference that immediately strikes the viewer is that the citizens in the Carter show all have names.

It is a show that was originally prepared for the candidate's election eve broadcast, but apparently it is now being thrown on the air in key markets to neutralize the Ford show and the Ford commercials. Several citizens appear to express doubts or questions, and then Mr. Carter is shown, sitting behind a desk with shelves of books in the background.

He is speaking noticeably slower than he usually does and, in a general way, he is answering their questions. Sometimes, he uses their names as if they were in the room instead of on videotape. "We want to know what you can do for us," says Ellen Kessler, a farmer's wife from Barrington, Ill. "We know what we can do for you." Mr. Carter smiles, leans forward and speaks soothingly into the camera.

6:55 P.M.: While the Carter show is still running on ABC, a five-minute Carter spot begins on NBC. In it, he is saying that unfulfilled promises of politicians have caused the American people to lose faith. At the same time on ABC he is saying that his own promises have been "cautious" and urging the viewers not to get discouraged. A spot for a Missouri office-seeker immediately follows. "Some public officials make promises," it says. "Others keep them."

7:22 P.M.: "All The King's Men," a movie about the corruption of power, is the feature film on KPLR-TV. There are no Ford or Carter spots, but in the second break for commercials Joseph Teasdale goes jogging.

7:30 P.M.: President Ford, who has not been heard from for more than an hour, is back on two channels. The brass band spot plays on NBC at the same time that the nameless Georgians are showing up on ABC in a break in "The Bionic Woman." Mr. Teasdale is back in the library.

8 P.M.: Mr. Carter has a minute before "All in the Family." He says "It won't be easy" to do what needs doing, "but let's get started." Archie Bunker, however, says that if the choice is between "Jerry Ford and Jerry Carter," he won't choose the one who "takes the big smile out of his mouth every night and puts it in a glass."

8:55 P.M.: Mr. Carter is supposed to be at a disadvantage in the final week because Mr. Ford has more money to spend. The Democrat spent most of his television money in September, but he still spent it buying time for the end of the campaign.

Here he is again for five minutes on ABC, defending his record as Governor, which the Ford commercials have been attacking. "We didn't do everything, and everything we did wasn't perfect," he says. At the end of the long campaign, the Carter forces have discovered that the public wants its candidates to acknowledge a little fallibility. While Mr. Carter is defending his record on ABC, the nameless Georgians are attacking it for Mr. Ford on NBC.

9:55 P.M.: A five-minute Ford commercial, a reprise of the Ford advertising themes, is shown simultaneously on CBS and ABC just before the late news programs. There is the band and film of the President talking to children, senior citizens, laborers and farmers. There is a clip from a month-old Ford speech and an announcer to declare: "After a decade of tension, the people and their President are back together."

But there is no footage of Mr. Ford talking directly into the camera as his rival has been doing all evening.

The Ford commercial comes after commercials for "Hefty Tall" garbage bags and Fritos, "America's munch favorite." When it is done, Joseph Teasdale is shown in the library, still looking for answers, patiently.

Ford Gathers Force

The President, seemingly fatigued from a series of long and arduous campaign days, was hoarse and baggy-eyed as he swept from Philadelphia to Indianapolis to Cincinnati to Cleveland. But his rhetorical style, listless as the day began, grew in force, perhaps drawing sustenance from a crowd of 15,000 in Cincinnati's Fountain Square or the hoopla created by a parade through a Slovenian and Polish neighborhood on Cleveland's East Side.

Some of the excitement, such as the impression of falling tickertape in Fountain Square, was staged. Supporters of the President dropped large clots of shredded paper on his limousine from a single Cincinnati building without surcease, creating a thick pile of litter on one street corner.

It was not altogether clear, either, how much stock could be put in Mr. Cheney's account of how well Mr. Ford was faring in opinion surveys. He said the President could obtain "the requisite 270-plus" electoral votes through having "pulled very, very close in the big industrial states, gone ahead in California and pulled up our base" in the farm and mountain states.

But Mr. Cheney also conceded that the race was "exceedingly close" in such battleground states as New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Ohio, Illinois and Mr. Ford's home state, Michigan.

He gave no evidence to support the thesis that Mr. Ford was overtaking Mr. Carter, and some observers read necessity rather than promise into the decision to have the President return, before Tuesday, to Texas, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Michigan.

Mr. Ford favored the appointment, by the President, of a permanent special prosecutor. Mr. Carter favored legislation that would "trigger" the automatic appointment of a temporary special prosecutor in the event of specific allegations of official misconduct.

Samuel Dash, the former chief counsel to the Senate Watergate Committee, who is now a spokesman for the self-styled citizens' group, characterized this distinction as the most important one.

A permanent special prosecutor, Mr. Dash said, "would be called 'independent,' but he is there in the Justice Department, to be removed only for 'extraordinary improprieties.'"

"This is the same protection," Mr. Dash continued, "that covered Professor Archibald Cox," the prosecutor who was forced out of office by President Nixon during investigation of the Watergate case.

Mr. Ford and Mr. Carter also disagreed on measures to supervise Federal intelligence agencies. Mr. Ford said that his Administration had already provided "sufficient" controls over the agencies. Mr. Carter joined the committee in urging "legislation to strengthen Congressional oversight" in this area.

The Committee for Watergate Reform was formed a month ago, and is principally composed of former counselors to the Senate Watergate Committee and members of the Special Prosecution Force.

Carter Rebuffed on '65 Land Plea

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28 (UPI)—Jimmy Carter made an unsuccessful effort in 1965 to reclaim some Georgia land being held as loan collateral. He was turned down because of suspicions his aim was to raise money for personal reasons, possibly politics, and not to expand his business.

The refusal came from the Small Business Administration and the Citizens' Bank of Americus, Ga., which lent Mr. Carter $175,000 in 1962 to build and equip an agricultural warehouse on 200 acres of land in Plains, Ga. The bank provided 25 percent of the loan with the Federal agency putting up the rest.

Mr. Carter was campaigning today and was not immediately available for comment.

Details of the 1965 request and its denial are contained in S.B.A. files made available in response to a Freedom of Information Act request.

Additional files of the agency were provided by "Spotlight," a conservative publication critical of Mr. Carter. The authenticity of the files was verified by the S.B.A.

The records show that in 1965 Mr. Carter asked that security liens be removed against some of his assets, including 200 acres of land in Plains. He said that he needed the land free of mortgage to borrow more money to expand his business.

According to the files, the president of Citizens Bank, S. R. Hunter, recommended against the request on the ground that Mr. Carter wanted the money for reasons unrelated to his business. Two regional S.B.A. officials in Atlanta, John P. Latimer and Max E. Houston, agreed with Mr. Hunter's assessment in separate memos and letters.

The records show that Mr. Hunter said that Mr. Carter said he needed money to run for the seat of then Representative Howard Callaway, Republican of Georgia. Mr. Hunter also was quoted as saying Mr. Carter wanted to start a rival bank in Americus.

Mr. Houston said in a memo dated Sept. 24, 1965, that "Mr. Carter had admitted in Mr. Latimer's office, and the (Citizens) Bank is also aware of it, that the primary reason was to obtain the necessary funds in starting another bank in Americus."

Mr. Carter did not run for the Callaway seat, deciding instead to seek the Governorship. He ran third in a three-man race. He then began laying the groundwork for his successful 1970 race for Governor.

Questioned about the statements in a telephone interview yesterday, Mr. Hunter said that the S.B.A. material was wrong about the political race and Mr. Carter's intention to start a bank.

"It reminds me of a dog worrying a bone," Mr. Hunter said. "There's nothing in it."

The S.B.A. files said the Citizens Bank recommended against releasing the land to Mr. Carter as the local institution responsible for helping supervise the loan.

In a memo to the agency, Mr. Houston said that Mr. Carter's request was denied Aug. 8, 1965, "with the concurrence of the participant" bank. He added that "the president of the bank felt that it was not needed for the reasons (Mr. Carter) had given, and he personally was not in favor of releasing any pledged collateral without some consideration."

Mr. Houston, acting chief of the S.B.A. loan processing and administration section in Atlanta, also said that Mr. Hunter believed Mr. Carter wanted the land free of liens to use as collateral for "outside financing for a couple of reasons."

"These being (1) to enter a political race against Congressman Callaway in the next election or to borrow money for purchasing stock in a new bank he is trying to form in Americus," Mr. Hunter stated that this was "the talk around town," he could not believe that anyone needs this money for the purposes he gives."

Gus Hall, Communist Candidate, Says Goal Is Just to Raise Issues

By RICHARD HALLORAN

Gus Hall chuckled: "I tell them that if New York City is not getting Federal attention, you should give the Communist Party a big vote. Then you watch the Federal Government pay attention."

Mr. Hall, the Communist candidate for President, chuckled again. "I use it all the time," he said, citing the times he has told workers and students and others to allude to a Communist threat to get what they want.

In a sense, that is the theme of Mr. Hall's campaign. "Ours is not an election party," he said. "An election is a continuation of our year-round work to raise issues we're interested in."

"An election is a different level, a different arena for the same struggle," he said.

The party platform this year calls for an 80 percent cut in defense spending, ending cold war policies, cutting the work week to 30 hours at 40 hours' pay, outlawing racism, assuring women's equality, other social programs and independence for Puerto Rico.

Listed in 20 States

This is the second run for the Presidency by Mr. Hall, whose Vice-Presidential candidate is Jarvis Tyner, chairman of the New York State party. In 1972, they were on the ballot in 14 states and got 25,343 votes. This year, they are on the ballot in 20 states.

Mr. Hall, who concedes that he is more optimistic than most of his party members, believes the party would get a million votes if it was listed on the ballot in 50 states. The party argues that discriminatory provisions in various state laws block it out.

On the voters today, Mr. Hall said: "I don't buy this apathy business. The voters are disgusted with the two big parties. They're waiting for something more meaningful to emerge." He spoke in an interview in his sparse campaign headquarters on lower Fifth Avenue.

"That's where McCarthy gets his support and it reflects a potential for a new movement in this country," Mr. Hall said, referring to former Senator Eugene J. McCarthy, who is running as an independent and without a party organization.

Even so, Mr. Hall said, "The lesser evil is still a problem." The "lesser evil," which plagues all third parties, holds that voters will not waste their votes on minor parties but will vote for the "lesser evil" of the two major parties.

Small-Scale Campaigning

Mr. Hall, 65 years old, has been campaigning across the country, mostly in big cities but occasionally in smaller industrial towns. Unlike the major candidates, who barnstorm with an entourage of aides and newsmen in chartered jets, Mr. Hall travels with one assistant on commercial carriers.

"Sometimes I'm asked why I don't have Secret Service men to watch me," Mr. Hall said with a twinkle. "I say: Who would watch the Secret Service—you know you can't trust them."

At his political rallies, said Mr. Hall, who has been in and out of jail since he began agitating for the Communist Party in 1927, there is something new. "For the first time in our party's history, we're attracting what I call people from the streets. Before, we got mostly party members."

In Buffalo recently, he said he drew 250 people in the first open Communist Party meeting in 30 years. He said that in Iowa City he got 800, in Chicago, 2,000, and in New York on Sunday night, 4,000.

Mr. Hall said that he had been invited to speak on many talk shows on local radio stations. "In the last five or six months, I've been on more talk shows than anybody. That's the hardest work of campaigning because it's one or two or three hours of solid response to questions."

Cabrera Press

Gus Hall

He said that press coverage, especially local newspapers, radio, and television, had been more extensive and objective than it was four years ago. "Where we have the biggest complaint," he said, is the national hookups. "That's where we're discriminated against."

He charged that the networks, the League of Women Voters and the two major parties were guilty of conspiracy in staging the televised debates between President Ford and Jimmy Carter, calling them "Ford-Carter love-ins."

Mr. Hall conceded that it would not be realistic to have all the candidates debate at one time. But the present setup, he maintained, "violates the law and they should be charged with it."

The Communist Party will spend about $500,000 for the Presidential campaign, most for television and radio spot commercials, and for travel for Mr. Hall and Mr. Tyner. Most of it is coming from fund-raising letters, collections at rallies, and some unsolicited contributions.

"That's a lot for us," Mr. Hall said. "But everything is relative. What we spend on this campaign, Carter spent on hotel rooms at the convention."

Newspapers Split on Use of Endorsen

Editorials Show Rejection of View That Papers Should Not Give Advice

By DEIRDRE CARMODY

Recently, The Wall Street Journal reprinted an editorial it ran four years ago to explain its dissent from the tradition that every good newspaper formally endorse a Presidential candidate.

"The short reason is simplicity itself," The Journal stated. "We don't think our business is telling people how to vote."

In the last week there has been a flurry of editorial endorsements in newspapers around the country. While the exact number will not be known for some time, it is an indication that the arguments for nonendorsement put forth by The Wall Street Journal and several other newspapers in recent elections have not taken hold. Most newspapers are still very much in the business of telling people how they should vote.

"Endorsements are part of a newspaper's function," says Robert T. Pitman, editor of editorials at The St. Petersburg (Fla.) Times. "If a newspaper cops out on that, it is not cultivating a close relationship with its readers. Newspapers must be involved in the political process and once you've made your recommendations, you've done your part to stimulate the political process."

Arguments Against Stand

Nonetheless, touchy questions have been raised by those who would abolish political endorsements and they are being dealt with in various ways in editorial boards around the country. The questions are touchy because they have to do with how readers perceive newspapers rather than with the actuality of how newspapers operate.

Some of the arguments advanced by newspapers that do not endorse candidates are the following:

¶Political endorsements create the appearance of partisanship, which the newspapers that are politically independent seek to avoid at all costs.

¶The credibility of the newspaper is strained when it publicly praises an official whom it originally endorsed or when it criticizes an official it originally opposed.

¶Readers tend to confuse editorials and news columns. Once the newspaper has endorsed a candidate on its editorial pages, readers tend to regard all news coverage about that candidate as biased in his favor.

¶Political endorsements are presumptuous, and the reader these days has little patience with presumptuousness.

The National Observer, a weekly newspaper published by Dow Jones & Company, has carried these arguments to their ultimate extreme and abolished the editorial page entirely. Instead, it runs an opinion page, which carries signed articles by readers, staff members and "other distinguished contributors."

"It is our belief that the media is increasingly mistrusted and the anonymity of editorials is increasing this mistrust," says Henry Gemmil, editor of The National Observer. "People are saying, who the hell is this anonymous person to tell me what I should think?"

Endorsements at bottom

Some newspapers have made the decision not to endorse the top of the ticket—President, governor and senator—but say that readers need guidance in local elections, where candidates are often unknown to the readers and races have been less well publicized.

The St. Petersburg Times endorses candidates at all levels, but offers the right to reply to those candidates who did not get endorsements. These replies, varying in length according to the importance of the race, are printed on the Op-Ed page, a page for reader opinions opposite the editorial page.

The Los Angeles Times announced in 1973 that it would no longer routinely endorse candidates for the top three offices, stating, "The wide public exposure of the candidates for the top three partisan offices makes our judgment on these dispensable. Our readers have more than ample information on which to make up their own minds."

The Los Angeles paper, however, reserved the right to endorse under "exceptional circumstances." It invoked that right recently when it endorsed Senator John V. Tunney, the Democratic nominee for Senator, over his Republican opponent, Dr. S. I. Hayakawa.

Newsday, on the other hand, announced in 1972 that it would endorse no candidates. Instead, the Long Island newspaper prints extensive voter information, giving its readers the candidates' views on similar questions; running question-and-answer interviews, and long articles on the major candidates.

News, Post and Times

The other major metropolitan dailies in the area all endorse candidates. The New York Times has endorsed Jimmy Carter for President and Daniel P. Moynihan for the Senate. The Daily News has endorsed President Ford and The New York Post has endorsed Mr. Carter. Neither The News nor The Post has announced its preference for the Senate.

Democrats Appear to Trail in Vermont Senate and Governor Races

By JOHN KILNER
Special to The New York Times

MONTPELIER, Vt.—As the first snows dust the Green Mountains, Vermont is seeing hard-fought political campaigns that are sorely testing its growing, but now divided, Democratic Party.

In the contest for the United States Senate, the Democrat, Gov. Thomas P. Salmon, appears to be gaining on the Republican, incumbent Senator Robert T. Stafford.

But in the race for Governor, the Democrat, State Treasurer Stella Hackel, is generally believed to have fallen behind the Republican, Richard Snelling, the majority leader in the State House of Representatives who is a wealthy businessman.

The candidacy of Mrs. Hackel, a conservative who won the party nomination in a three-way primary, has divided the Democrats.

Traditionally, this state, with a population of a little under a half million, has been staunchly Republican, although often of the ruggedly independent style of former United States Senator George D. Aiken. But, in recent years, with the decline of agriculture, the disillusionment of the Nixon years, the drop of industry and the influx of new people, Democratic strength has grown. Democrats hold both the governorship and the other United States Senate seat, occupied by Patrick J. Leahy.

Problems With Renaissance

In this year's election, however, in which two men generally perceived as liberals, particularly on environmental issues, are vying for the Senate seat and two generally conservative, probusiness candidates are running for Governor, the Democratic renaissance is running into problems.

A former three-term Governor, Philip Hoff, a local party hero who in 1968 became the first Democrat elected Governor in 109 years, has publicly denounced Mrs. Hackel as a "reactionary conservative" whose election would "set the Democratic Party back 50 years."

Martin Johnson, head of the Environmental Protection Agency in Governor Salmon's cabinet, who is regarded as a figure with a future in the party, has broken ranks to endorse the Republican, Mr. Snelling. Around Burlington and surrounding Chittendon County, the state's largest city and main Democratic stronghold, a number of important party workers are reportedly sitting the election out.

Immediately after the September primary, Mrs. Hackel held a two-point lead over Mr. Snelling, according to a poll conducted by Prof. Vincent Naramore, of St. Michael's College in Winooski. In the latest poll, released two weeks ago, Mr. Snelling was leading with 44 percent to Mrs. Hackel's 38 percent.

There have been few real issues between the two, although each has accused the other of harboring desires to raise taxes.

Mrs. Hackel has aroused some controversy, however, by saying that she would eliminate the "super agency" form of cabinet built up by Governor Hoff and his successors of both parties, even if the legislature objected. Her plan, she said in an interview, would "eliminate four levels of patronage" that she deemed unnecessary in such a small state.

She has also been put on the defensive by charges that she lacks "humanity" because of a remark in which she likened welfare mothers to an "heiress" on a "trust fund."

Mr. Snelling has been endorsed by the state's major daily newspapers. His Sheiburne Industries, manufacturers of sporting goods, has made him a millionaire. Both candidates are 49 years old.

In the closely contested Senate race, the latest poll by Professor Naramore shows Senator Stafford ahead of Governor Salmon, 48 percent to 41 percent. Right after the primary, the polls showed Senator Stafford ahead by 14 points, twice the margin.

Mr. Salmon, 44, who is regarded as a strong, personable campaigner, is recovering from a nearly disastrous primary in which he barely eked out a narrow victory over Scott Skinner, a young unknown who headed the local Ralph Nader organization. The Governor had lost popularity when he sought an increase in the sales tax, a measure defeated by the legislature.

Your antifreeze will freeze before our oil will.

We know you'll probably never see temperatures cold enough to make antifreeze freeze up. But it's nice to know that there's an oil that's good enough to flow freely after antifreeze, not to mention ordinary oil, has turned to slush.

Mobil 1 is a new, synthesized motor oil that can actually help a properly maintained engine get started at 35 degrees below zero!

If this were the end of the story Mobil 1 would still be a remarkable buy. But it's only the beginning. Since Mobil 1 reduces friction and drag better than ordinary motor oil, you get better mileage. With Mobil 1 the average car will get up to 10 extra miles out of a tankful of gas.

The oil that saves gas also saves oil. In highway and city fleet tests Mobil 1 cut oil consumption by as much as 25%. The explanation is simple. Mobil 1 doesn't evaporate as rapidly as ordinary motor oil.

Being synthetic, Mobil 1 also gives you better engine protection. To prove it, we put Mobil 1 in a fleet of highway patrol cars for 12,000 miles. But even after all this abuse, we found that Mobil 1 still protected like brand new ordinary oil!

In an age when many products don't seem good enough, it's almost a shock to see one that's this much better than it has to be.

NOTICE OF A PUBLIC HEARING
ON AN APPLICATION FOR A RATE INCREASE BY BLUE CROSS AND BLUE SHIELD OF GREATER NEW YORK

The New York Insurance Department will hold a public hearing on November 12, 1976 on an application for a proposed rate increase that has been filed by Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Greater New York for its community-rated contracts. It will be held at the New York County Lawyers Association, 14 Vesey Street, New York City, beginning at 10 a.m. A second session of the same hearing will commence at 6 p.m.

The application requests an overall average increase of 23½% for community-rated hospital insurance, surgical-medical coverage, Medicare Supplementary coverage and for the Community Health Program of Queens-Nassau. Also requested is a change in rates for a series of riders.

The proposed increases range as follows: in basic hospital coverage, from a low of 18.9% for the 120-day contract for individuals who pay directly to a high of 29.4% for the 21/180-day contract for family members with group coverage; in basic surgical-medical coverage, from 1.6% for the Executive Indemnity contract for family members who pay directly to 29.4% for the $4,000/$6,000 contract for individuals with group coverage; in Medicare Supplementary coverage, the overall average increase is 29.3%. The Medicare Supplementary direct payment individual Low Option contract would increase 12.1%. The proposed effective date is January 1, 1977.

The application does not affect any experience-rated contracts.

Analysis of the application indicates that the requested increase is composed of the following averages:

- An overall average of 13½% to pay for increased costs of current benefits for all four classes of coverage;
- An overall average of 5% for new state-mandated benefits for maternity in hospital and surgical-medical coverage; and
- An overall average of 5% to restore statutory reserves.

The Plan covers the following counties: Bronx, Columbia, Delaware, Dutchess, Greene, Kings, Nassau, New York, Orange, Putnam, Queens, Rockland, Staten Island, Suffolk, Sullivan, Ulster and Westchester.

The rate increase application and related materials are available for public inspection at the offices of Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Greater New York at the following addresses:

623 Third Avenue, Manhattan
1 Hanson Place, Brooklyn
221-10 Jamaica Avenue, Queens Village
700 White Plains Road, Eastchester
82 Washington Street, Poughkeepsie
585 Stewart Avenue, Garden City

A synopsis of the rate filing is available on request at any of the above offices or by calling (212) 481-2346.

The application and supporting exhibits are also available for public review at the offices of the New York Insurance Department on the 32nd floor at Two World Trade Center, New York, New York, and Empire State Plaza, Agency Building One, Albany, New York.

Persons wishing to testify at the public hearing are requested to notify Ms. Mildred Yellen in writing at the New York City office of the Department. Those wishing to submit written comments may do so and such comments will become part of the official record.

The award and the warning were given at the Plaza Hotel, where baseball history will be made next week when the first auction of free agents is held on Thursday. One day later more players will be marketed, in the expansion draft that stocks the new American League teams, at Toronto and Seattle.

Bench shared the winner's circle with Red Smith, the Pulitzer Prize sports columnist of The New York Times, who was honored for 50 years of "graceful prose." And the Yankees even won something in another realm as baseball entered the season of prizes: Billy Martin was named best manager of the year in the American League in an Associated Press survey that gave him 164½ votes to 155 for Whitey Herzog of the Kansas City Royals. Earlier Dancy Ozark of the Philadelphia Phillies was elected No. 1 in the National League.

But the salutes were tossed, as it were, on the eve of battle. As the 25 free agents prepared for next week's auction, the Reds said that they were "stymied" in their contract talks with Don Gullett, the star pitcher who refused to sign and who now has played out his option. Gullett dislocated a tendon in his right ankle while winning the first game of the World Series but is still considered one of the hottest free agents in the marketplace.

The president of the team, Robert L. Howsam, announced Wednesday

Along with his interest in racing, Dixon inherited much of his wealth from his uncle, the late George D. Widener, who was chairman of The Jockey Club from 1950 to 1964. After Widener's death in 1971, his horses and stallion shares were sold for $9 million, a record at that time for a dispersal sale.

Since the mid-1940's, horses on the flat and over the jumps have carried the Dixon racing silks of dark blue with yellow hoops, or the emerald green and royal blue colors of his wife. The family's best horse was Will I Rule, a winner of six stakes events. But the Dixons never owned what could be called a "classic" horse, a horse good enough to run in the Triple Crown races.

By the time he bought the 76ers, Dixon had decided to get rid of virtually all his thoroughbred holdings. His wife, he said, was "not enamored" of racing. His son, 23-year-old George Widener Dixon, had "no interest in it at all," and his daughter, Edith, a 19-year-old college student, had lost

I'm asking them to double up in vans."

Young Man With a Horn

This is Honey's 50th year with the show. He says he's going to try hard to retire. He doesn't go back quite far enough to remember the night Carrie Nation, in New York on one of her saloon-busting crusades, charged into the horse show and called fire and brimstone down on the decadent silk hats of the voluptuaries in the audience. He does, however, go back beyond the days of Lulu Long Combs, the dauntless old doll from Kansas City who used to compete every year with her pet skunk on the carriage seat beside her.

In fact, he goes clear back to the fine thoroughbred, Sting, the sire of Questionnaire, both of whom raced for James Butler when that wealthy grocer and Col. Matt Winn ran the Empire City track, now Yonkers Raceway. Honey was an exercise boy for Butler.

"I wanted to be a jockey," he said, "but I never rode races on the big time, just at fairs in Bangor, Me.; Rutland, Vt.; Brockton, Mass., and places like that. Then I turned to riding jumpers in shows and one time Reginald Reeves told me they needed an assistant ringmaster for the National. I think he picked me because I already had classy riding clothes."

No Juilliard graduate, Honey was taken aback one night when the ringmaster didn't show and his boss said: "Pick up his horn and do something." He learned, and he still keeps the upper lip fit for other shows around the country where he serves as ringmaster. Out in St. Louis recently he admired a Boosey—that's the Stradivarius of horns—in a collection in Gussie Busch's coach house and the Cardinals' owner gave it to him.

"Mellowest tone I ever heard," Honey said. "Best show horse I ever saw? Wing Commander was great, but for my money there never was another like King of the Plains, a hackney pony from England. He was owned by John R. Thompson of the restaurant chain. Remember those lunchrooms with one-armed chairs like the ones you had in reform school? Thompson was famous for his beefless stew."

Islanders, Resch Stop Blues, 5-2; Knicks Routed by Cavaliers

Cold 2d Period Key to 114-90 Defeat

Special to The New York Times

RICHFIELD, Ohio, Oct. 28—The New York Knicks, who had got off to their best start in seven seasons, stumbled tonight and looked more like the Knicks of last season as they were routed by the Cleveland Cavaliers, 114-90. Cleveland, which won its first three National Basketball Association game, gave New York its first loss in four games.

The Knicks, playing without Walt Frazier, who was still in Atlanta after the funeral of his 23-year-old sister, played Cleveland to a 26-26 tie in the first quarter, but were never in the game after that.

Bobby (Bingo) Smith, the last of the original Cavaliers still with the team scored 23 points as the Cavaliers led by as many as 30 points in the late stages of the game which was played before 10,837 fans. Campy Russell had 18.

Earl Monroe's 22 points toped New York. Dennis Layton, starting for Frazier, added 21.

Knicks Stay in Range

The trio of John Gianelli, Mo Layton and Earl Monroe sparked the Knicks to a 26-26 standoff in the opening period.

Gianelli, hitting 62 percent from the field in the club's first three games, converted al lthree of his first-period field-goal attempts, scored 9 points and brought Ne wYork back from a 5-point deficit.

The Knicks trailed by 21-16 with 3:49 to go in the period when Gianelli dropped in a pair of free throws and scored a layup with an assist from Monroe.

Monroe added 8 points, in the period, and Layton, making his second start in four games, tossed in 7.

The Cavaliers, last season's winner of the Central Division title, broke the game open in the second period when they led by as many as 20 points.

They took a 57-43 lead into the dressing room as three substitutes, Austin Carr, Campy Russell and Clarence (Foots) Walker, combined to score 17 points.

The Knicks missed nine of their first 10 shots in the second quarter while the Cavaliers raced to a 57-37 lead.

McMillian Is Stifled

The big surprise of the half was the Knicks' Jim McMillian. McMillian, averaging 17 points a game, was blanked over the first two periods, getting off just two shots against Bobby (Bingo) Smith.

The Knicks shot 30 percent in the second period (7 of 23) and all that kept them in the game were 6 straight points on field goals by Layton, Haywood and Monroe just before the half ended.

The Cavaliers took a 23-point lead on two occasions in the third period

Nystrom's Goal Ends Power-Play Drought

By PARTON KEESE

Special to The New York Times

UNIONDALE, L.I., Oct. 28 — The Islanders took the cure tonight. After dropping two of three to Detroit and Montreal on the road last week, they returned to Nassau Coliseum to face the St. Louis Blues, a club they beat four times and tied once in five games and outscored 26 goals to 6 last season.

The Blues obliged once more, losing, 5-2, and kept the Islanders undefeated at home and lodged in first place in the Patrick Division with 15 points.

Also following the lopsided pattern started last season was Glenn Resch, who tended goal in all five games against St. Louis, recording a 1.40 goals-against average. The little goaltender stopped 30 of 32 shots tonight.

Drouin Opens Scoring

The Islanders also found the answer to their stick power play against the Blues. With a third-period goal during a man-advantage situation, New York ended a 1-for-16 drought. Bob Nystrom was the scorer, recording his seventh goal of the year on the Islanders' third power-play attempt of the night.

Jude Drouin, marking his 28th birthday, started the Islanders off approximately with an unassisted goal, his second of the season. Claude Larose of the Blues lost the puck near his own cage, and Drouin grabbed it and skated across the slot until he found an opening on the right side.

That was the extent of the scoring in the first period as New York squandered two more power-play opportunities, running that anemic streak to one goal in the last 17 power plays.

Before most of the 14,254 customers could return to their seats for the second period, the Islanders' Gerry Hart had skated three-fourths of the rink's length and scored his team's second unassisted goal. Hart went around Gilles Marotte, faked out Ed Staniowski, the Blues' goalie, and deftly slid the puck in for a 2-0 lead at the 23-second mark.

Although Clark Gillies had two assistants on the next Islander goal, he did most of the hard work himself. The big forward swooped in on Staniowski, shot at the rookie and when it was blocked, simply swept the puck into the net as he skated by.

Breaking the spell Chico seems to cast over the Blues, Bob McMillan got a good bounce off the boards behind the Islander goalie and shot the puck past Resch for a goal. Billy's brother

McVay Alters Line, Keeping Archer In

By MICHAEL KATZ

Special to The New York Times

PLEASANTVILLE, N.Y., Oct. 28—Like a chess player who has lost seven straight games, John McVay made some moves today with the hope that putting pawns in different positions might make a difference.

The Giants' new coach altered his defensive line, moving John Mendenhall, who has played right tackle for 4½ seasons, to left tackle and putting Troy Archer, who has played right end, left tackle and linebacker, in Mendenhall's old spot.

Dave Gallagher feels rooked.

"I don't think I should be benched," the erstwhile starting left tackle said. "I never really had a bad game to warrant what's happened."

Arnsparger's Idea

Gallagher was benched by McVay's predecessor, Bill Arnsparger, for Archer last Sunday. Archer, the No. 1 draft choice, responded with 10 tackles in the 27-0 loss to the Pittsburgh Steelers ("I did all right, I guess," he said) and is one of the young players of the future, if the National Football League team has a future.

"Gallagher's been doing a good job," said McVay, "but right now we feel Troy's got a slight edge."

The edge could be greater, McVay reasoned, by moving Archer to the right side where Jack Gregory, a 10-year man and defensive captain, plays end. On the left side, Archer would work with George Martin, who is only in his second season and first as a regular and who could benefit from Mendenhall's closer presence.

"We thought working with Jack will help settle Troy down," said Jay Fry, the defensive line coach.

"I've broken in three rookies," said Gregory, "Jerry Shirk at Cleveland, John Mendenhall and now Troy."

The first two have developed into stars.

Mendenhall, who has a "great right flipper," or right arm, according to Fry, said the switch to a position where he would lead with his left most of the time did not bother him. "Maybe I can get about 20 tackles this week," he said, alluding to the fact that he would be playing Sunday opposite the Philadelphia Eagles' strong side, where most plays are run.

Mendenhall was also pleased that

Raven Hanover Rated A Threat in Messenger

By MICHAEL STRAUSS
Special to The New York Times

WESTBURY, L.I., Oct. 28—What a difference a favorable post position and one "good" race can make.

There he was, Raven Hanover, the fine looking 3-year-old bay colt being led into Roosevelt Raceway's barn area this freezing morning after a jogging session. He had worked dilligently in preparation for Saturday's $161,290 Messenger Stakes. Now he was to be cooled out. "That colt's been picked as second choice in the morning line," an assistant trainer said to a groom. "Only Keystone Ore has been picked ahead of him."

At the Race Tracks

Apart from the fact that this year's Messenger—the third leg in pacing's triple crown—has attracted an unexpectedly large field of 11, the high prerace rating being enjoyed by Raven Hanover represents the other major surprise.

This 3-year-old son of Meadow Skipper failed to win in 16 straight starts during the summer. He finally ended his losing streak last Saturday by triumphing in a $13,000 overnighter at Roosevelt—by 4½ lengths.

But it wasn't his winning margin that lifted eyebrows. It was his clocking. The colt was timed in 1:58 3/5 in beating Lauras Skippers after starting from the No. 2 post.

Then Raven Hanover received the pole position—No. 1—in yesterday's drawing for starting berths. The track's oddsmaker also remembered that the pacer's long losing streak had started immediately after a Roosevelt victory—on July 16—in which he also clocked 1:58 3/5.

"It could be he's partial to this track," said Buddy Regan, who perennially leads Roosevelt's trainers in victories. "It's interesting to note his recent losses occurred at such places as Lexington, Delaware and Hazel Park."

Regan, who is to be represented by Shadow Don Time, the 50-1 outsider will start in the highly unfavorable No. 8 spot added he wouldn't mind changing posts with either Raven Hanover or the favored Keystone Ore. The latter, will be seeking the first triple crown pacing sweep since 1970.

"I know the Keystone colt will be in the second tier—starting from No. 9—said Regan. "But he'll be right behind the fast-leaving Raven Hanover and a horse can be dragged behind a leader in a race such as this."

Because Raven Hanover had made all the early pace in his two preceding outings, Georgy Sholty, his driver, was asked whether his battle plans for the Messenger called for the same opening rush.

"I never make up my mind until the starter says 'go.'" Sholty said. "I've had the colt leave fast lately. But it wasn't because I necessarily was setting him up for a similar departure in the Messenger.

"Keystone Ore, of course is the horse to beat," said the 120-pound reinsman. "He seems to be the best in a year that's produced some great 3-year-olds—as great as I've ever seen. It's too bad Armbro Ranger and Oil Burner aren't eligible. Both certainly belong in it."

At Richmond . . .

The convictions of seven men involved in an attempt to fix a 1975 race at the Bowie race track in Maryland were upheld by the Fourth United States Circuit Court of Appeals. Four of those convicted in the fix attempt, which never paid off at the Bowie mutuel windows, were jockeys. Three other men were found guilty of tax fraud in the case.

The alleged fixers didn't collect because track officials ordered an investigation of the February 1975 race after discovering that a great number of winning tickets had been bought at one window. Stewards viewing films also said the jockeys — Eric Walsh, Luigi Gino, Jesse Davidson and Ben Feliciano—rode their mounts in "a highly irregular manner."

Laboratory facilities for testing blood samples will be available for use for the first-time next Monday. The equipment will be located adjacent to the harness paddock and will be under the supervision of the paddock judge. The program will be restricted to postrace testing of blood and urine samples for the time being. Total testing, which includes prerace sampling, will start Nov. 15.

"It just seemed inappropriate to have a lot of money tied up in expensive broodmares," Dixon said yesterday. "And George was very interested in basketball."

Had Dixon's son been more interested in football than basketball, a racing friend suggested, the millionaire Harvard graduate would now own a football team.

"There's no question," the friend said, "that Fitz has plenty of money."

If family disinterest caused Dixon to abandon racing in favor of pro basketball, it was tax strategy that dictated the timing of the horse sales. Unless the stable showed a profit this year, after a number of years in the red, the entire operation would have been considered a hobby and Dixon would not have been able to get tax deductions for any of the losses.

"It seemed appropriate to sell the broodmares to get the cash," he explained.

Five yearlings bred by Dixon were sold at Saratoga last August, and the final dispersal sale of his stock (eight broodmares, three weanlings and nine stallion shares) will be conducted by the Fasig-Tipton Company next month in Kentucky. The stallion holdings include breeding shares in such outstanding sires as Cornish Prince, Never Bend, Raise a Native, Riva Ridge and Secretariat, for whom the going rate is $250,000 a share.

Not Entirely Out of Racing

Dixon suffered a major loss recently when his best broodmare, Treat Me Fair, died. The mare, for whom Dixon paid $410,000 in 1972, was in foal to Secretariat.

Despite the general dismantling of his thoroughbred operation, the new owner of the 76ers pl a token racing preser would probably keep horses, including Bro That 5-year-old horse, er, the sire of Ruffia had been intended for daughter on the show will be converted into

Cosmos Find (Artificial) Grass Is Greener ir

By ALEX YANNIS
Special to The New York Times

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J., Oct. 28—Clive Toye, who has directed the soccer fortunes of the Cosmos since their inception in 1971, admired the panoramic view of the football stadium in the Meadowlands today, sighed and said, "I won't have to negotiate for a stadium again."

Moments earlier, Sonny Werblin, chairman of the New Jersey Sports and Exposition Authority, had told a crowded press conference near the stadium's press box, "We are thrilled to death to have the Cosmos finally come to their proper home."

"This is a milestone in our history," said Toye, who has negotiated seven stadium contracts. "We have played in almost every open patch of grass or artificial grass in the metropolitan area and it's great to have our own stadium."

Under the terms of the 10-year deal, the Cosmos will have their choice of cer League season and will be assured dates during the North American Soc- of potential playoff dates. They plan to open the season with a four-team tournament in early April and will hold two international tournaments before the end of August. No date conflicts with the National Football League Giants are expected.

The Cosmos, who played at Yankee Stadium this year and received no money from parking and concessions, will share in parking and concession revenues at the Meadowlands. The major share of that revenue, however, will be retained by the Sports and Exposition Authority.

Several Cosmos' players were on hand today, including the newly signed Yasin Erol Ozdenak, a goalkeeper from Turkey. They walked onto the field to check the AstroTurf, a surface most soccer players dislike.

"It's not that bad," said Keith Eddy, the captain. "I would say it's the best you can find."

"It's not as high Giorgio Chinaglia, "h than some others l league."

"We are going to again and again for dicted. "It may not but it will happen come."

TEAMS
-0) at Giants (0-7-0) —The Giants are the favorites, the worst insult the Eagles have taken lately. As for newly hired coaches in the N.F.L. this season, the Lions won in Tommy Hudspeth's debut but the Bills' Jim Ringo and the Falcons' Pat Peppler have not yet experienced victory. Betting choice: Giants by 3 points.

Jets (1-6-0) at Buffalo (2-5-0)—Mark the date. Richard Todd on Oct. 31 succeeded Joe Namath but no one knows as yet if a star is being developed. Gary Marangi, who has been sharp in preseason games the last three summers, is the Bills' new quarterback with Joe Ferguson out for the season. Betting choice: Buffalo by 12.

NATIONAL CONFERENCE

Dallas (6-1-0) at Washington (5-2-0) —Roger Staubach has a splint on his passing hand and has not thrown a pass this week. The replacement, Danny White, was the best in the World Football League in Memphis. Four other Cowboys regulars are hurt but the depth is there so it does not matter. George Allen won't tell who the Redskin quarterback will be, but look for Bill Kilmer. Betting choice: Dallas by 5.

Minnesota (6-0-1) at Chicago (3-4-0) —The Cowboys took the bite out of the Bears, who lost to the Vikings by one point three weeks ago. Fran Tarkenton, who sometimes leans to excess, claims his halfback, Chuck Foreman, is the world's greatest football player. Foreman has already gained 1,006 yards rushing and receiving. Betting choice: Minnesota by 6.

San Francisco (6-1-0) at St. Louis (5-2-0)—It is probable that the winner will make the playoffs and the loser will not. "Our backs are to the wall," says Dan Dierdorf, the Cardinals' all-pro offensive tackle. The team's strength, protecting the passer, negates the 49ers' big asset, pass rushing, and the St. Louis offense is far superior. Betting choice: St. Louis by 8.

Green Bay (3-4-0) at Detroit (3-4-0)— Lynn Dickey, the Packer quarterback, has completed 50 of 77 pass attempts in the last three games and the team has learned how to score. Lions are just about out of defensive linemen and running backs. Betting choice: Detroit by 5.

New Orleans (2-5-0) at Atlanta (1-6-0) —Both sides are likely to try new quarterbacks. It would be Scott Hunter, once a regular at Green Bay, for the Falcons and Bobby Douglass, the big left-hander once a regular at Chicago, for the Saints. New Orleans won the earlier game, 33-0, thanks to seven turnovers in their favor. Betting choice: Even.

Seattle (1-6-0) at Los Angeles (5-1-1) —The Seahawks' coach, Jack Patera, denies that his teams only victory has gone to their heads. For a change the Rams have all three quarterbacks available with Ron Jaworksi the likely starter. John Cappelletti, who began the season as if he would run for 1,500 yards, has been eclipsed by Lawrence McCutcheon. Betting choice: Los Angeles by 21.

AMERICAN CONFERENCE

Cleveland (4-3-0) at Cincinnati (5-2-0) — Thanks to Brian Sipe, the quarterback for whom no one had much regard, the Browns have won three straight and with a fourth could tie the Bengals for first place. But the Bengals were encouraged by their decisive triumph over Houston, 27-7. "We're on our way," says Stan Fritts, the fullback. Betting choice: Cincinnati by 11.

Denver (4-3-0) at Oakland (6-1-0) — Raiders' six victories have come by a total margin of only 30 points but they have a two-game lead in this division because the Broncos and Chargers seem unable to beat them. Betting choice: Oakland by 8.

Kansas City (2-5-0) at Tampa Bay (0-7-0) — Quick, what team was it that lost all of its 14 games? Answer: no team has ever lost 14 games in the N.F.L., which isn't to say it will never happen. The Buccaneers have all the qualifications. Betting choice: Kansas City by 6.

New England (5-2-0) at Miami (3-4-0) —Only Baltimore a year ago beat the Dolphins twice in the same season during Don Shula's seven campaigns in Miami. The Patriots could do it, too, by winning this game. They have not won in the Orange Bowl in 10 years. Dolphins' injury excuses have worn thin. Betting choice: New England by 3.

San Diego (4-3-0) at Pittsburgh (3-4-0)—Whatever happened to Lynn Swann, the graceful receiver who was the most valuable player in the last Super Bowl? The Steelers are passing less, with Terry Bradshaw still out, and Swann is being covered more. He has yet to score. Chargers do poorly on defense, especially against the pass. Betting choice: Pittsburgh by 12.

MONDAY NIGHT

Houston (4-3-0) at Baltimore (6-1-0) Oilers will be severely handicapped if neither of their adept but ailing wide receivers, Ken Burrough and Bill Johnson, can play. A lot of people think the Colts will play the Cowboys in the next Super Bowl. Betting choice: Baltimore by 10.

League teams and, finally, in 1974 to the Oakland Raiders. There, helped by the players' strike, he made the team. But got injured on one of his first plays and sat out the year.

He refused offseason surgery, returned last year, was hurt and was finished as Ken Stabler's back-up. He did undergo surgery after the season, but was traded to Tampa Bay.

"He was a Joe Kapp-type," said LoCasale, "Not pretty. Scrambled. Ran recklessly; but a good feeling for the game."

Arrived at 2 A.M.

He arrived at the airport at 2 o'clock this morning and was to have met with Dan Henning, the quarterback coach, for what Henning described as a "crash course."

Henning shook his head in disbelief when he learned that Lawrence had gone. Henning, now 34 years old, was a back-up quarterback himself once for the San Diego Chargers.

"Do you know how many guys out there would give their eye teeth to get this job?" he asked.

How about Henning?

"I thought about suiting up," he said, and his smile couldn't conceal the fact the prospect had delighted him. "I just know that after the season," said Ward, still hurt, "Lawrence is going to call me collect. And I'm going to get a lot of pleasure out of not accepting the call."

Lawrence, though, "can walk away from football," according to LoCasale. And he has.

The New Yorkers did manage to sign a wide receiver-kick-return man nicknamed the Electric Flea. He is Keith Denson, who was with the W.F.L. in 1974 and 1975 . . . . The Jets may sign a quarterback on Friday.

rked out for k despite nose, shin and toe injuries. "He's still gimpy," said McVay. "He takes a terrible beating, but he is a relatively fast healer." The coach also hopes Clyde Powers, the strong safety, heals quickly. A bruised right shoulder has kept Powers out of practice so far, but the defensive back expects to play against the Eagles. Larry Mallory, one of McVay's former players at Memphis of the World Football League, has been working in Powers's place.

Why pay higher '77 prices?

The Honey Bee. Datsun's lowest priced car. $2844.00*

What kind of car can Datsun offer for such a low price? Surprisingly, quite a lot. For example, you get Datsun's durable 5-main-bearing engine, flow-through ventilation, electric rear window defogger, inside hood release, bucket seats up front, and all-vinyl upholstery. You get an EPA mileage estimate of 29 MPG City and 41 Highway. Your actual mileage may differ depending on how and where you drive, the condition of your car and its optional equipment. Brown Recalls '75 Loss In Confronting Harvard

By DEANE McGOWEN

The year was 1949, Charles (Rip) Engle was the Bruin coach and Joe Paterno was the team captain. That team went into the Harvard game with a 5-1, won-lost record. The Bruins beat the Crimson and went on to an 8-1 mark. A year ago Brown hoped to win its first Ivy championship since the league began round-robin competition in 1956. But Harvard ruined the Bruins, 45-26, before 17,000 fans in Brown Stadium, the first sellout there in 40 years.

Ivy League Roundup

Here they are again. Brown, Harvard and Yale are tied for first place in the league, each with a 3-1 mark, but one (barring a tie in Cambridge) will be looking up instead of down.

Harvard is a slight favorite to dash Brown's hopes once again, but the Crimson will have to do something about an offense that has been sluggish of late. The Crimson was outgained by Dartmouth and Princeton and Jim Kubacki, its fine quarterback, was sacked 12 times in the two games.

Joe Restic, the Harvard coach, said, "The great thing about the Ivy League season is that when you get to this point, all the games are pressure games, and the team that handles the pressure best deserves to win."

Note that he said "deserves" to win. In such an emotional match as this, anything can happen and probably will.

Brown Defense Strong

Brown is physically strong, particularly on defense. It stands fifth in the nation in scoring defense. Scott Nelson and Lou Cole, the linebackers, are primarily responsible for that, along with Frank Pozniak, the safety who has had six pass deflections and one interception.

Overconfidence was Brown's undoing last year. John Anderson, Brown's coach, won't have to worry about that this time. He said his team was ready. Mike Prairie, the all-Ivy center, put it this way, "We'll play them anywhere they want to play us."

Meanwhile, at New Haven Yale faces a rugged but inept (offensively) Cornell team, and the Elis boast an awesome offense (seventh nationally) coupled with a defense that is second in the league, with an average yield of 211.5 yards a game.

Carmen Cozza, the Yale coach, said he would not have any trouble keeping his team "up" for the Big Red. "I don't have to say too much. I just show them two films—our game with Cornell last year and Cornell's victory over Harvard this year." He added, "We beat them last year in the final four minutes, and they did a terrific job against Harvard in Cambridge."

The Elis have it all—superb runners in John Pagliaro, Mike Southworth, John Hatem, Rick Angelone and Eddie Lewis—and a defense led by Keith Bassi at middle guard and Kurt Nondorf, a sophomore safety.

George Seifert of Cornell said of Yale, "They don't do a heckuva lot. They come right at you." Cornell will need more than an emotional lift for this one.

Losing Streak at Home

Penn and Princeton in Palmer Stadium will pit the league's best total defense against Bob Graustein, Penn's quarterback, who leads the league in total offense and passing. Princeton has lost nine straight home games and five straight to Penn. Bob Casciola of Princeton expects a low-scoring game but said, "Penn has a knack for getting up for us. Princeton is a big game for them"

Penn's tough defenses will be at top strength with the return of Bill Petusky at middle guard. The game will mark Penn's 100th anniversary of football, and that ought to provide some incentive.

Columbia plays Dartmouth in Hanover, N.H., and the result will depend upon the survival of the fittest. There are more injuries to key personnel on both squads. Bill Campbell of Columbia said, "I've never seen anything like it." Jake Crouthamel of Dartmouth countered with, "We're going to start with a lot of new faces because a lot of the old ones are banged up." However, in depth and quality, Dartmouth is better prepared, and the Big Green team is still in contention for the league title, a fact that should give Dartmouth a mental edge.

that the Reds would not try to sign any players from other teams in the draft. But they explained yesterday that they would still try to keep Gullett, though he and his agent "have refused to even discuss a possible contract until after the draft."

Bench, a 10-year man with the Reds and something of a team loyalist, suggested in an interview that even the tightly knit Cincinnati club would feel the pressures of baseball's new economic revolution.

Bench Supports Howsam

"If Don Gullett makes the final decision himself," the 28-year-old catcher said, "I think he'll stay with the team. If his agent makes it, he'll take the best deal open.

"I can understand why the Reds are staying out of the free-agent market. It is a luxury they can afford as world champions, and there is the matter of Bob Howsam's principles and morals. I personally support bob Howsam's reasons. I don't know what baseball is coming to. If the salaries keep going up, some clubs won't be able to make it, which is what happened in basketball and in the World Football League.

"But then it's a business, and if Mr. Howsam lets all his good players get away he will have to answer for it. Maybe the Reds can afford the luxury now, but things might be different in a year or so. I don't know how long the Cincinnati Reds can remain what they are, under the new rules of baseball."

George Steinbrenner, chief owner of the Yankees, was asked about his pitching holdout, Doyle Alexander, who wants the team to guarantee him a certain amount of work. He replied, "I won't discuss the Alexander case, but no Yankee player will ever dictate how many games he will play in."

As for the World Series, the Yankees' first in 12 years, Bench observed: "We had respect for their pitching, but we hit it. I was afraid they would come back, all the way back, so that's why I was so anxious to win that last game. But the Reds are good at applying the pressure. We take command. We intimidate."

For his role in intimidating the Yankees, he received the keys to a new Thunderbird for one yea intended to pass it along whose car was stolen Houston, though "why want to steal that beat-u yond me."

On the dais, Bench sat Smith, who was also hon by the Silurian Society people and who was inc Madison Square Garden The columnist received which was presented the former State Depa whose trial a quarter of featured a controversial

Bodine Sets Modified Mark

MARTINSVILLE, Va., Oct. 28 (AP)—Geoff Bodine of Bellingham, Mass., set a track Modified qualifying record today at Martinsville Speedway and won the pole position for the 250-lap Modified half of Sunday's $85,690 Cardinal 500 classic national championship doubleheader. Bodine, driving a Pinto, turned the .525-mile track at a speed of 92.777 miles an hour to beat 53 other cars for the No. 1 spot. His speed broke the record of 92.373 m.p.h. set in 1972 by Paul Radford of Ferrum, Va.

Berger Warns New York City Against 'Maximizing' Hospital Admissions

appear in hospital admission rooms are a lot sicker than the general populace and most likely need to go to the hospital."

Mr. Berger's statement was a response to a report in The New York Times yesterday quoting Donald Ashkenase, acting senior vice president for finance of the corporation, who said, "The corporation is trying every way possible to maximize its third-party revenue, including increasing the patient census in municiple hospitals."

The object, he said, was to raise the hospital census by as much as 5,000 patients by next March. He said that would generate as much as $7.5 million in additional Federal and state funds to help offset the corporation's current estimated deficit of $50 million.

'Clarifying' Statement Issued

Dr. Holloman, in a "clarifying" statement yesterday, denied that there was any policy to admit any patients who did not belong in a hospital bed.

Reflecting the political and fiscal bitterness surrounding the state's efforts to force the corporation to cut its spending, Dr. Holloman contended that the city had been financialy penalized by the state whenever its occupancy rate dropped in municipal hospitals, thus creating, fiscal pressure upon the corporation to keep its beds filled with patients.

"It's damned if you do and damned if you don't," one corporation official remarked.

Toia Asks Legal Opinion

Nevertheless, state officials, felt that the quasi-independent city agency had given them an opening by saying it was "pressuring" municipal hospitals to "maximize admissions."

Commissioner Philip L. Toia of the State Department of Social Services said that he had requested his legal counsel to determine whether there were grounds for civil or criminal prosecution of the corporation. In an interview from Washington, he said, "I want to find out if there is any evidence of fraud or malfeasance or the inappropriate use of public funds."

Mr. Toia said he was aware that many hospitals, both private and public, had been accused of filling their beds with patients simply as a means of increasing their revenues from public and private health insurers. In fact, he said, he was in Washington especially to study the problem.

Bellin Unimpressed

The reactions of the two state officials brought laughter from Dr. Lowell E. Bellin, the City Commissioner of Health and chairman of the 15-member governing board of the corporation. .

"So they want to put us in jail, do they," Dr. Bellin roared into the telephone. "Well then, they'll have to build cells to hold just about every private and public hospital administrator in the city."

This was so, Dr. Bellin said, because Federal and private health-insurance systems encourage inpatient care. "It takes honest people and makes them crooks," he added.

This was precisely how Mr. Berger chose to describe corporation officials. "Anyone who places patients into beds that don't belong there is stealing from the people," he said.

"This has nothing to do with health care for the sick and the poor," he said, adding:

"It is caring for a bureaucracy and the acceptance of illegal monies to help them balance their budget. What are they going to do next, go into bank robbing?"

Neither Governor Carey nor Mayor Beame had any comment on the corporation's admissions policy. However, a spokesman for the Governor said that Mr. Carey had been told about Mr. Toia's request for a legal inquiry and that he supported the move.

Meanwhile, physicians and nurses from the State Department of Health were checking patients' records yesterday in municipal and voluntary hospitals in an effort to determine whether any hospitals were admitting patients unnecessarily. A state health official said it was too early to report any findings.

A spokesman for the corporation attributed any increase in admissions at municipal hospitals to seasonal factors, such as colder temperatures.

Argentines Report 10 Slain

BUENOS AIRES, Oct. 28 (Reuters)—Ten leftist guerrillas were killed today in a gun battle with an Argentine security force in woods at La Plata, 37 miles south of here, according to the police. They said that the guerrillas had opened fire from two cars on approaching troops. No casualties among the security force were reported.

Referrals Set in Pharmacy Boycott

By MURRAY ILLSON

The Westchester County Executive said yesterday that because of a boycott of Medicaid-reimbursed prescriptions by Westchester pharmacists, a telephone referral service had been set up to insure that Medicaid patients receive their medication.

The County Executive, Alfred B. DelBello, announced in White Plains that he had directed the Commissioner of Health of Westchester, Dr. Jack Goldman, to develop plans to meet any contingency "that might cause further adverse impact upon Medicaid recipients."

Pharmacists in Westchester and on Long Island and in some 20 other counties throughout the state have been refusing to fill prescriptions for Medicaid patients because the pharmacists said they were losing money under new Federal and state reimbursement guidelines. They have said they are dissatisfied with the program because "there has been no increase since it began in 1968."

Information Available During Day

Mr. DelBello said that when a patient must get a prescription filled, he should go to his regular pharmacist first. If that pharmacist will not fill the prescription, the patient should then call the Westchester County Information Center at 682-2900 from 10 A.M. to 4 P.M. Volunteers will advise the patient of a pharmacy in his area that will fill the prescription.

Dr. Goldman said that it was too early to tell what the effect of the boycott was, but that many pharmacists were filling Medicaid prescriptions. "When we know what the extent of the problem is, then we will know what measures to take," he said. "I will be working in cooperation with the State Health Department in this matter."

Brendan Lawler, president of the Westchester Pharmaceutical Society, which he said represents 1,040 pharmacists, said the society was not taking any official position on the refusal of some pharmacists to honor Medicaid cards. He said pharmacists are still filling prescriptions of patients who pay for the prescription and then seek reimbursement form the county's Department of Social Services.

Few Working With Medicaid

Mr. Lawler said he had been told by a spokesman for the department that 24 of the 186 pharmacies in the county were still filling Medicaid prescriptions.

While many pharmacists were continuing to refuse to fill prescriptions for Medicaid customers in Nassau and Suffolk Counties because they feel the allowances provided by the Federal and state plans are causing them to lose money, officials on Long Island said no medical emergencies had arisen as a result of the pharmacists' action.

Large, chain drugstores and drugstores in supermarkets have continued to fill prescriptions for Medicaid customers. In addition, several hospitals, including Long Beach Memorial and Hempstead General, have agreed to fill Medicaid prescriptions in emergency cases.

... (AP)—Charlie Scott scored 31 points tonight to lead the Boston Celtics to a 112-105 victory over the Buffalo Braves at the Hartford Civic Center.

The Celtics earned their third straight victory, without a loss, in the while Buffalo's won-lost record dropped to 2-2.

The Celtics took a 14-point lead into halftime and extended it to 88-72 at the close of the third period. The Braves cut the margin to 10, at 102-92, with six minutes to play, but a jumper by Kevin Stacom and two by Jo Jo White got the Celtics out of danger.

Buffalo had taken a 29-25 lead at the end of the first quarter, and the score was tied five times in the second period before a Stacom basket put the Celtics ahead, 41-39. From then until halftime, Boston outscored the Braves by 18-6.

The high scorer for the Braves was Don Adams with 28 points.

streak to six games by blanking the Pittsburgh Penguins, 3-0.

The Flyers' fifth victory in six games kept them 2 points behind the New York Islanders in the Patrick Division of the N.H.L.

Reggie Leach gave the Flyers a 1-0 lead at 9:56 of the first period when he intercepted a Pittsburgh attempt to clear the blue line, skated to the right circle and fired a shot into the far corner against the Penguins' goalie, Gordon Laxton.

Mel Bridgman made it 2-0 at 1:20 of the second period when his low shot from the right circle glanced off Laxton's stick and into the cage.

The Flyers' captain, Bobby Clarke, scored his first goal of the season at 18:58 of the middle period, taking a shot off the boards by Larry Goodenough and gunning a 15-footer into the far corner.

Amateur Units Meet Without the N.C.A.A.

WASHINGTON Oct. 28 (UPI)—Representatives of nine sanctioning organizations—with the National Collegiate Athletic Association absent—decided today to support creation of a "higher authority" to regulate amateur sport in the United States.

"We would hope to get a considerable amount of power and leverage with such a sport authority," said Dr. LeRoy Walker, who chaired the first meeting of the organizations. Walker is president-elect of the American Alliance of Health, Physical Education and Recreation and was the United States Olympic track coach at Montreal last summer.

Many disputes in amateur sports have involved the N.C.A.A. which declined to send a representative. Walker said the organization's absence didn't necessarily mean it wasn't cooperating, even if it looked that way.

"I would hope that we wouldn't have to do anything without the involvement of all existing bodies," he said. "Just because they're not here doesn't necessarily mean they're not cooperating. We represent too many athletes to stop because one group doesn't participate."

Represented were the National Association for Sport and Physical Education, the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics, the National Association for Girls and Women in Sport, the Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women, the American Park and Recreation Society, the Amateur Athletic Union and the American Association for Leisure and Recreation.

Black Hawks Fined $500 For Locker-Room Ban

MONTREAL, Oct. 28 (AP)—Clarence Campbell, president of the National Hockey League, said today the league had fined the Chicago Black Hawks $500 for refusing to allow reporters into the dressing room following an Oct. 9 game.

League bylaws say teams must open their dressing rooms to reporters within 10 minutes after each game. However, the Black Hawks failed to comply following a 2-1 loss to the New York Islanders at Uniondale, L.I.

Legislative Choices: New York City

Although public attention, such as it is, has been directed principally to the national races in this Presidential election year, the choice of a new State Legislature—150 Assemblymen and 60 Senators—presents a challenge and an opportunity that New York voters cannot afford to overlook. In a time of continuing financial crisis, in City Hall and in Albany, the next Legislature could determine the chances of city and state to regain economic and fiscal health.

Unfortunately, New Yorkers have never paid adequate attention to the character of their legislative representation in Albany. Fewer than one in five voters, for instance, can name his local assemblyman. That helps to explain why most legislative seats in the city are regarded as safe seats—once the primaries are over—in districts that are either overwhelmingly Democratic or, in a few cases, predominantly Republican. Nevertheless, there are a few close contests this year and there are other contests that should—and could—be close if voters took a hard look at the candidates and the issues.

The Senate

Democratic challenger George N. Spitz has waged a thoughtful, issues-oriented campaign against veteran Republican-Liberal Senator Roy M. Goodman in Manhattan's 26th District. Mr. Spitz has been courageously innovative, especially in his proposals for phasing out rent controls. However, Senator Goodman remains our preferred candidate because of his experience, his intelligence and his overall effectiveness as a legislator. Senator Goodman is especially important as a relatively independent voice for the city within a majority party caucus heavily oriented toward upstate and the suburbs.

Another member of that caucus, one who, in contrast to Mr. Goodman, has not stood up for the city and who has consistently been one of the city's poorest representatives in Albany, is Senator John D. Calandra, Republican-Conservative from the 34th District in the Bronx. Senator Calandra, who has enjoyed Democratic support in the past, faces a challenge this year from a Democratic regular, John M. Mullins, an administrative aide in the Assembly. Mr. Mullins, who has campaigned for legislative reform, could not help being an improvement.

Among the incumbent Senators who are expected to win handily—and deserve it—are Carl H. McCall (Dem.-Lib.) and Franz S. Leichter (Dem.-Lib.) from Manhattan; John J. Marchi (Rep.-Cons.) of Manhattan/Staten Island; Carol Bellamy (Dem.-Lib.) of Manhattan/Brooklyn; Robert Garcia (Dem.-Lib.) of Manhattan/Bronx, and Karen S. Burstein (Dem.-Lib.) of Queens/Nassau.

Special mention is due Manfred Ohrenstein (Dem.-Lib.) from Manhattan's 27th District, whose outstanding performance as minority leader is a good argument for a change of control in the Republican-dominated Senate.

The Assembly

On the Assembly side, Marie F. Vale, who has worked as a researcher and speechwriter for members of Congress, is mounting a spirited campaign to recapture the one-time Republican stronghold in Manhattan's 66th "Silk Stocking" District. But in our view, the freshman incumbent, Democratic-Liberal Mark Alan Siegel has already proved himself an articulate young reformer who can work effectively for change within the system. Mr. Siegel clearly merits re-election.

Another freshman Democrat, Joseph Ferris, faces a stiff challenge from Vincent A. Riccio, the Republican-Conservative incumbent whom he ousted in a close race two years ago in Brooklyn's 51st District. Although Mr. Ferris' performance has been somewhat disappointing, his generally liberal and staunchly independent voting record is clearly superior to that of Mr. Riccio.

In Staten Island's 60th District, Mary T. Codd, an inexperienced housewife and teacher running under the Democratic and Liberal labels, is contesting the seat of Guy V. Molinari, a Republican-Conservative who opposed the Emergency Financial Act to save New York City and opposed court reform, but favored anti-abortion and anti-busing measures. So much for experience; we choose Mrs. Codd.

Although their seats do not appear to be in danger, voters would do well to make a special effort to insure the return of the following outstanding lawmakers: Edward H. Lehner (Dem.-Lib.), and A. B. Pete Grannis (Dem.-Lib.), both of Manhattan; G. Oliver Koppell (Dem.-Lib.) of the Bronx, and Harvey Strelzin (Dem.-Lib), Dominick L. DiCarlo (Rep.-Cons), Leonard Silverman (Dem.), Melvin Miller (Dem.) and Charles E. Schumer (Dem.-Lib), all from Brooklyn.

Two legislators who appear to us to be particularly deserving of defeat are Louis F. DeSalvio (Dem.), who has misrepresented the 61st District, covering Staten Island and a portion of lower Manhattan for 36 years, and John A. Esposito from Queens' 23d District, whose ultra-conservative diatribes are an embarrassment even to his fellow Republicans and Conservatives.

Beyond McCarthy

The on-again, off-again fortunes of Eugene J. McCarthy in his quest for a place on New York State's ballot as an independent Presidential candidate appear close to the end of the road. By a vote of 5 to 2, the State Court of Appeals has disqualified the former United States Senator from Minnesota. The ruling, which is being appealed to the United States Supreme Court, was based on real deficiencies in the manner in which McCarthy supporters collected and submitted the petitions required by the election laws.

We nevertheless are uneasy about legal requirements which have left so much doubt about Mr. McCarthy's case that the initial ruling against him by the State Supreme Court was subsequently reversed by the Appellate Division. In a 4-to-1 ruling, that court ordered the former Senator's name back on the ballot before the Appeals Court reached its decision to the contrary.

Political candidates and their supporters should not be relieved of their responsibility to collect and identify the necessary signatures diligently and honestly, and otherwise to make a credible case that theirs is a serious candidacy. The capacity to organize a campaign is an appropriate requirement in the search for political legitimacy, and Mr. McCarthy's forces may well have defaulted on those grounds. But there is also much evidence that present rules may be giving the regular political establishment too powerful a weapon with which to shoot down challengers from outside the privileged circle.

These obstacles are clearly not insuperable, as Jimmy Carter proved in his brilliantly organized, successful challenge of his party's regulars in the primaries. But there are enough indications of deliberate roadblocks in the way of independents to warrant a fuller review after the elections, when such matters can be discussed with greater detachment.

Judicial Choices: Brooklyn, Queens, Staten Is.

Yesterday, we gave our preferences for judicial offices in Manhattan and the Bronx. Today, we cover Brooklyn, Queens and Staten Island.

The choices by The Times are based upon reports from various judicial selection panels (including the fact that some candidates refused to be screened by their peers), recommendations of the Citizens Union and the bar associations, study of the records of incumbents in public posts, and independent inquiry.

Brooklyn—Surrogate's Court

Independent voters in Brooklyn have a chance to vote down the Democratic machine candidate and also strike a blow at Republican deal-making for this important post.

Bernard M. Bloom, who has the Democratic and Republican endorsements, is a Democratic district leader who has promised to use the Surrogate Court for patronage appointments. He is opposed by George F. Donnelly (Cons.), an attorney who has declined to be interviewed by the Citizens Union, and by Daniel Eisenberg (Lib.), an attorney with great experience in the field of estates and trusts.

We strongly urge voters to pull the lever for Daniel Eisenberg, the Liberal Party candidate.

Brooklyn, Staten Island—Supreme Court

In the 2d Judicial District, State Supreme Court, embracing Brooklyn and Staten Island, there is one vacancy with four candidates: Sebastian Leone (Dem.), Brooklyn Borough President and former Supreme Court law secretary; Victor J. Tirabasso (Rep.), Supreme Court law secretary; Michael V. Ajello (Cons.), a practicing attorney; Paul Meyrowitz (Lib.), a trial attorney. We endorse Borough President Leone.

Brooklyn—Civil Court

Countywide, there are three vacancies and nine candidates: Elliott Golden (Dem.), Assistant District Attorney since 1956; Martha Gibbell (Lib.), specialist in landlord-and-tenant law; Bernard Fuchs (Dem.), Small Claims Court arbitrator; Herbert Feinsod (Lib.), a private practitioner; Ruth Moskowitz (Dem.), former Legal Aid Society attorney; Abraham Reingold (Lib.), Small Claims Court arbitrator; John A. Maguire Jr. (Rep.-Cons.), a private practitioner; Louis J. Marrero (Rep.-Cons.), former law secretary to a Supreme Court justice; Carmine J. Cascio (Rep.-Cons.), an attorney. We endorse Elliott Golden, Martha Gibbell and Bernard Fuchs.

In the 2d District, John L. Phillips Jr. is running unopposed with multi-party endorsement.

In the 5th District, Barry Hurowitz (Dem.-Lib.), a Civil Court specialist, is opposed by Kevin P. McGovern (Rep.-Cons.), law secretary to a Court of Claims judge. We prefer Barry Hurowitz.

Staten Island—Civil Court

In the 1st District, Norman C. Morse (Dem.-Lib.), Assistant District Attorney since 1960, is opposed by Michael J. Cilmi (Rep.-Cons.), a private practitioner. We prefer Norman C. Morse.

Queens—Supreme Court

In the 11th Judicial District, State Supreme Court, Nicholas Ferraro (Dem.-Rep.-Lib.), Queens District Attorney and former State Senator, is opposed by Gail C. Giordano (Cons.), a private practitioner. Nicholas Ferraro is endorsed.

Queens—Civil Court

For three countywide vacancies, eight candidates are running: Joscelyn E. Smith (Dem.-Lib.), Small Claims arbitrator and former Assistant Corporation Counsel; Joseph Rosenzweig (Dem.-Lib.), former Queens County official and private practitioner; Benjamin Glass (Dem.), Small Claims arbitrator; Sidney Schneider (Rep.), a law secretary; Robert J. Hanophy (Cons.), a trial attorney; Warren M. Goidel (Rep.-Cons.), Assistant State Attorney General; Eugene T. Matthews (Rep.-Cons.), a law secretary; Nicholas L. Pitaro (Lib.), Small Claims arbitrator.

We endorse Joscelyn E. Smith, Joseph Rosenzweig and Benjamin Glass.

In the 2d District, Herbert J. Miller (Dem.-Lib.), Assemblyman since 1966, is opposed by Jeremiah Duggan (Rep.-Cons.), an attorney. Herbert J. Miller is endorsed.

In the 6th District, Cosmo J. Di Tucci (Rep.-Cons.), law secretary to a Supreme Court justice, is running against Robert T. Groh (Dem.), former Sanitation Commissioner. We prefer Cosmo J. Di Tucci.

Presidential Election: Of Candidates, Issues and Voters

To the Editor:

President Ford should be elected, if only to act as a brake on a spendthrift Congress. Congress spends billions as though they were only millions.

The Republicans never seem to stress the role the Democratic Congress has played in bringing about the very things the Democrats complain of: high prices, tremendous inflation and all the ills that go with a spendthrift government.

President Ford has shown himself prudent in vetoing measures that would have made even greater deficits. Here's to President Ford, and to fiscal sanity.

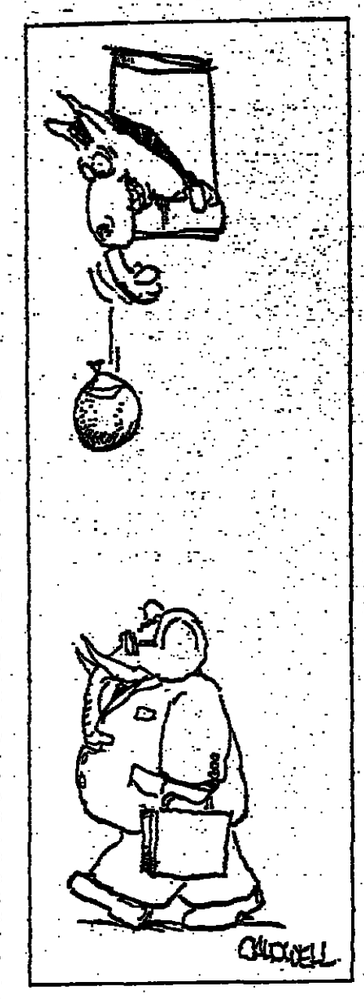
To the Editor:

This is an appeal for a big turnout at the polls on Nov. 2.

Voter apathy is understandable. Our self-esteem is not enhanced by a review of the last four years of government. What confidence can we have in our vote when we recall that four years ago we chose a Vice President who pleaded nolo contendere to a criminal charge and who was forced to resign, and we elected a President who abetted bribery, obstructed justice and abused power, and whose Attorney General, the highest law-enforcement officer of the land, subborned perjury? That election led to felony convictions of the President's men, the molders of the nation's life. Can we forget those days and vote on Nov. 2 with confidence that we are not again misled? Can we forget more recent lawlessness in high places —bribery as a way of business by our multinational corporations? Is it politics or moral conviction that forced the resignations of Bo Calloway and of Agriculture Secretary Butz, the muffling of F.B.I. Chief Kelley's criticism of the press, the Brown-Rumsfeld explanation of General Brown's denigration of England, Iran and Israel?



Does President Ford understand New York City's fiscal problems or did he mean what he said last year in Yugoslavia?

While Mr. Carter is an unknown in national politics, his soul-searching reach intelligence and his c confidence. With Mr. a good chance to re self-esteem.

The Environmentalist

To the Editor:

As one who has followed the progress of environmental legislation—and particularly the Clean Air Act — through the Congress, I find it ironic that The Times selects Mr. Salmon over Robert T. Stafford for Senator from Vermont because Mr. Salmon is a "strong environmentalist" [editorial Oct. 20].

I am not familiar with Mr. Salmon's record, and he may very well be as you describe him, but I am intimately familiar with Mr. Stafford's record as a member of Senator Muskie's Subcommittee on Environmental Pollution. He has been a strong supporter and initiator of environmental legislation. The major fight over the last two years in Senator Muskie's subcommittee was over the Clean Air Act. Again and again, Senator Stafford was a leading supporter of strong provisions in this bill and, when compromising proved necessary, took the initiative in devising proposals which gave away as little as possible.

I have no quarrel with Mr. Salmon. However, Mr. Stafford has demonstrated conviction; he has been highly effective and, equally important, he has been—and will be if re-elected — strategically placed on Senator Muskie's subcommittee, where he has been of real service to the environmental movement.

How to Cure Medicaid

To the Editor:

Your Oct. 13 editorial on Medicaid fraud discusses inherent weaknesses in the Medicaid system and the advisability of using positive incentives to patients, physicians, etc. as a remedy. Nowhere do you mention the weaknesses of the users in perpetrating the fraud.

With the ever-declining state of morality in both the public and private sectors, one would think it might be prudent to admit now that the fault lies in ourselves; and a more appropriate remedy might be penalties for dishonesty and abuse rather than incentives for behavior which we should, ideally, be able to take for granted.

A U.S. Zionist's Case for UNICEF

To the Editor:

People are asking how I can continue to work for UNICEF in view of the United Nations General Assembly's vote equating Zionism with racism.

They know that I am committed to Zionism as an affirmative response to the age-old curse of anti-Semitism and to the longing of the Jewish people to return to their homeland, there to live as of right and not on sufferance. Many also know that I came here as a refugee from Germany, my ancestral home for 500 years, where I worked for Youth Aliyah and where I witnessed the suffering of innocent children.

I have remained dedicated to Youth Aliyah, a movement founded to rescue, heal and rebuild the lives of Jewish children in Israel. Many of the recent arrivals are fleeing from persecution in the very countries whose governments equate Zionism with racism.

In the past people readily understood that my work for Jewish children led me to join UNICEF in its effort to help all the world's deprived children. Those who question my support today must be even more puzzled by the continued endorsement by the Government of Israel, which has renewed its financial contribution to UNICEF for 1976. Israel, indeed, recognizes UNICEF as an autonomous, humanitarian agency which has remained immune to the political virus that has infected other United Nations agencies. I share Israel's position.

Currently, UNICEF is assisting Israel in an experimental project to train supervisors for day-care programs for the underprivileged in which both parents and preschool children take part. UNICEF hopes to adapt this project to other countries.

There is a special intensity to the cry of a suffering child who, in its innocence, cannot understand the reason for its suffering. I have heard that cry. It sounds the same whether caused by hunger, disease, the horror of natural disaster, war or the cruelty of man. The number of destitute children is tragically growing. UNICEF steadfastly continues to help them: black, yellow, white—children of all nationalities and all creeds.

How then could we punish UNICEF for the sins which it alone among the U.N. agencies did not commit? How can we deprive children of the help they so desperately need?

As an American citizen, a former refugee, a Zionist and a member of the National Board of Hadassah, I shall continue to work for UNICEF. This is my contribution to its child-assistance projects in 102 developing countries and an expression of my moral support.

A Message From the Next President

By Gerald R. Ford

WASHINGTON—For many weeks, the major issues of this year's Presidential campaign have been obscured by a fog bank of political rhetoric and petty diversions.

In the closing days, however, three issues are finally beginning to emerge with greater clarity. It's none too soon, because the differences between the candidates this year are deep and profound.

One major difference lies in the future growth of the Federal Government.

In my view, the explosion in Federal spending, Federal deficits and Federal debts that began in the early 1960's was the chief villain behind the horrendous inflation of the early 1970's —inflation that eventually drove us into the worst recession in a generation.

No people can live beyond their means for very long without incurring a heavy penalty. The people of New York City learned this lesson last year, and they have shown admirable courage in finally putting their financial house in order.

I have tried to apply that same wisdom to the economic troubles of the United States. I have held down spending by restricting Government growth and vetoing over 60 bills. I have slashed Government red tape. And I have sought and successfully obtained the biggest tax cuts in our history.

Today, inflation is less than half of what it was of two years ago. Unemployment is still far too high, but a record number of people have gone back to work in the last 18 months. Progress may seem slow, but it is also sure and steady—and it will continue.

In this election, however, we could reverse our direction. My opponent continually promises more programs and more government: What he neglects to say is that in fulfilling his promises, he could very well give us more taxes or more inflation—and probably both.

This is no time to fall back on old, discredited habits. Instead of continually expanding the size of government and the encroachments that government make upon our personal lives, we should sharply reduce the growth of government—and return the savings to the American people in the way of further tax relief. The first priority of my next administration will be an additional cut in Federal taxes.

A second emerging issue in this campaign is the conduct of American foreign policy.

My opponent has advanced ideas that are isolationist in character and could plunge us into an international crisis. When you add up all of the policy changes he recommends—reduced defense spending, a halt of the B-1 bomber program, a pullout of United States troops from South Korea and other Asian posts, reduced United States presence in Europe, hints that we might have new relationships with Communist leaders in Western Europe, and advance notice to our adversaries of our intentions in Yugoslavia and elsewhere—the net effect is a clear departure from the foreign and defense policies supported by our last six Presidents.

Those policies have served us remarkably well. Today, no American is fighting or dying on a foreign battlefield, and fear of the draft no longer disrupts the lives of our young people. Our alliances in Europe and in Asia have never been better. And we are making solid progress in our relationships with the Soviet Union and China.

But we are at peace today only because we have been willing to pay the price of a powerful military force. As President Eisenhower pointed out, "A good defense is never a cheap defense."

We are also at peace because we have been faithful to our friends and we have stood tall and straight in dealing with our adversaries. To preserve the peace, we should not discard the foreign-policy traditions of the past but build wisely upon them. That is what I intend to do if I am elected.

There is one other question that must be weighed during this campaign. It is the question of whether we want leadership that is proven and reliable, or whether we shall venture into the unknown with a man who is untested and untried in the larger affairs of the nation.

In the next four years, our President —whoever he is—must address many difficult problems. A new SALT treaty must be negotiated. We must defuse the powder kegs in Africa and the Middle East. We must guide the nation toward energy independence. We must restore full prosperity with stable prices, creating enough jobs for every American who wants to work while providing for the sick, the elderly and the infirm with compassion and generosity.

These are great tasks. Throughout this century, when faced with similar challenges, the American people have chosen leaders who were rich in experience, knowledge and understanding. This Tuesday we can afford to do no less.

By Jimmy Carter

PLAINS, Ga.—The most important skill for any President is leadership. A national leader, to be effective, must have the ability to lead this country and the vision to know where it must be led.

We do not have that kind of leadership now. What we do have—government by veto, government by negativism, government by deadlock—is not the kind of leadership our country needs, wants, or deserves.

Any Administration that finds 6 percent inflation encouraging, that finds 7.8 percent unemployment acceptable, that can produce a $65 billion annual deficit, and add 2.5 million Americans to the poverty rolls in one year—and then say it is proud to run on that record—lacks concern for people, lacks vision, lacks leadership, and lacks any understanding of the inherent greatness of this country.

As President, I believe I could lead our country. I know, for example, that most of our people who are able to work want to work. We can bring together business leaders, labor, and Government officials to explore and expand employment opportunities. We can cooperate with our private-enterprise system and with local and state governments to create meaningful jobs. We can expand productivity and hold down interest rates and tax rates, while still keeping a tight rein on inflation.

The first victims of inflation are those who have little influence with government—the poor, the unemployed, the elderly. We must insure that the economic activity of this country benefits all of our people, not just a fortunate few.

The President has a responsibility to develop specific goals in energy, Government reorganization, transportation, housing, health care, agriculture, tax reform, crime control, and the correction of our urban crisis, and then harness the tremendous resources of our nation to meet those goals.

I believe we can re-establish a sense of morality and purpose in our national character in both domestic and foreign affairs, and be bold in our search for world peace and the protection of human rights.

But leadership and goals are not enough. There must be vision.

For the last 23 months I have been traveling across America, talking to our people, listening to our people, and learning from our people, and my vision of what this nation is and what it can be has grown and ripened on the basis of that experience.

I have never had more faith in America than I do today. We have an America that, for all its trials and tribulations, still has the great resources of a courageous people, and the best system of government on earth.

We can have an America, if we will work for it, that turns away from scandal and corruption and official cynicism and is once again as decent and competent as our people.

We can have an American Government that does not oppress or spy on our people, but respects our dignity and our privacy and our right to be let alone.

We can have an America in which the bond of trust between those who govern and those who are governed has been restored.

We can have an America that provides excellence in education for every child, and that provides first-rate medical care for every citizen.

We can have an America that provides equal justice for all, the poor as well as the rich, an America in which the public official who betrays the people's trust is treated as severely as the petty thief.

We can have an American foreign policy that is both realistic and idealistic, one that reflects the character and the compassion and the common sense of our people.

We can have an America with a strong economy, one that meets our people's legitimate needs and still maintains a balanced budget.

We can have an American military establishment that has eliminated waste and become lean and tough again, and that can protect our security against any threat.

We can have an American President who does not govern with negativism and division, but who has confidence in the future, who can heal our wounds and bring us together, a President who is not isolated and timid, but takes his strength and wisdom and courage directly from our people.

That is the America I see in our future. We face a historic choice in this election. We must choose between the acceptance of mediocrity and the challenge of greatness. Our people are ready to move ahead again, to put our troubled past behind us, and to call forth vigorous and competent leaders who can tap the wisdom, the courage, the idealism, and the dedication of the people of America.

The Knot That Rhodesian Negotiators Must Untie

By Robert I. Rotberg

CAMBRIDGE, Mass.—The tragedy of Rhodesia is that the mere gathering of black nationalists around a conference table in Geneva may prove insufficient to produce a settlement satisfactory to all. The persuasive powers of a distinguished British chairman, the assurances of United Stats assistance, the support of now-pragmatic South Africans, and—should it be realized—even the public humbling of a hitherto intransigent Rhodesian white public may all be to no avail.

Black Rhodesians (the future Zimbabweans) are not yet united in ultimate purpose. All are grateful to Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger for his timely ability to persuade the Rhodesian regime of Ian D. Smith that whites could win a war against Chinese- and Soviet-backed guerrillas only if South Africa continued to provide overwhelming support, which it will not. Mr. Kissinger knew that South Africa was more than prepared to withdraw its backing in order to ensure a rapid transfer of power in Rhodesia to a stable, moderate black government.

Africans are pleased that Prime Minister Smith capitulated under pressure. That makes the ultimate struggle easier, for whites will no longer have the will to fight. The more-militant blacks can thus afford to see the Geneva conference fail, and to return to an accelerated military struggle. If this happens, the guerrillas will have the support of President Samora Machel of Mozambique, who still would prefer a revolutionary government to come to power in Zimbabwe through a protracted military victory.

What must be at stake for the African nationalists in Geneva is power. Whicheyer black group forms the new government will, the others fear, control Zimbabwe indefinitely.

Naturally, there are ideological differences between the groups. Equally, there are clashes of personality, a measure of ethnic or sectional discord and the remnants of historic animosity.

Until 1963, Joshua Nkomo, a social worker from the Bulawayo area of southwestern Rhodesia, led a united nationalistic movement in what was then Southern Rhodesia, a British colony. Then the Rev. Ndabiningi Sithole, an American-educated Congregationalist from eastern Rhodesia, and Robert Mugabe, a teacher from northern Rhodesia who had spent several years in Ghana, formed a breakaway faction.

They claimed that Nkomo was too soft — that he compromised with whites and was uninterested in socialism. For them and their largely educated followers, Nkomo's legitimacy had been eroded by years of easy living, egregious negotiating errors, and a generally flabby approach to what they considered the hard questions of nationalistic tactics. They wanted someone more revolutionary, more ascetic, more violent.

Above all, Rhodesia is divided into two linguistic groups, Cishona and Sindebele. Sithole and Mugabe speak Cishona, and Nkomo and most of his lieutenants speak Sindebele.

Out of this ideological, personal and sectional/ethnic dispute emerged Nkomo's Zimbabwe African People's Union (ZAPU) and Sithole's Zimbabwe African National Union (ZANU).

In 1971-72, when Nkomo, Sithole, Mugabe and many others were still in local jails (having languished there for seven or eight years), Bishop Abel Muzorewa, a Methodist, and several followers of both Nkomo and Sithole formed the African National Council as a temporary successor to both ZANU and ZAPU. In 1974, after the South African Prime Minister, John Vorster, persuaded Smith to release Nkomo, Sithole and Mugabe, the old ZAPU and ZANU organizations were merged into the Council. But this expedient lasted only a matter of months.

Nkomo's ZAPU, Mugabe's ZANU, Sithole's ZANU and Muzorewa's Council are at odds. Now, too, there is a fifth group with which only Mugabe, of the political leaders, has ties. It consists of the guerrillas themselves, with bases in Mozambique. They are led by Simon Mutuswa (Rex Nhongo), assisted by a political committee whose chairman is Zinashe Machingwara. The guerrilla leadership and rank-and-file (as well as the black soldiers and policemen in Rhodesia) are predominantly Shona. Moreover, they are overwhelmingly of the Shona subethnic group called Karanga, from southern Mashonaland. (The Karanga number about 45 percent of the black population of Zimbabwe.) None of the older political leaders are ethnically close kin.

Within the black ranks, and even within the ranks of the Cishona speakers, there are serious cleavages. Only the guerrillas are now armed and trained, and only they, and the Karanga, can benefit from a breakdown in negotiations. If Prime Minister Smith remains intransigent, this group will benefit. Smith's threat to conclude a settlement with "tame" blacks is not only unrealistic, it is foolish bravado.

The problem in Geneva is now to arrange a settlement that will bring about a true transitional regime without the overhanging threat of civil war. To do so may mean major concessions by whites, and even by some of the African groups, and the contriving of externally funded and supported institutional arrangements capable of minimizing or eliminating interethnic conflict.

In a Real Horse Race, Maybe Turnout Will Go Up

IN THE NATION

By Tom Wicker

The most conventional wisdom of the 1976 election campaign is that voter turnout, which dropped to 55 percent of citizens of voting age in 1972, may fall below 50 percent this year. Partly based on 1972 statistics, partly derived from 1976 polling data and consonant with widespread reports of voter apathy, this assumption may nevertheless be more accepted than warranted.

That's the late suggestion in an October survey by the Gallup Poll, which found that those expressing "a considerable degree of interest in the election"—thus likely to vote—have increased by eight points since August, to a total of 56 percent. And the Gallup findings tend to confirm a compelling analysis by Michael Kagay of the Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs at Princeton University.

Made available to me after the more conventional assumption was discussed in this column Oct. 17, Professor Kagay's study suggests that voter turnout in 1976 may well show an increase over 1972.

Here is a necessarily brief outline of his reasoning:

Over the ten Presidential elections from 1932—when the coming of the New Deal brought in modern party alignments and attitudes—to 1968, the average turnout was 58 percent of all persons of voting age. In that period, the lowest turnouts were, interestingly enough, in the historic election of 1932 (52 percent) and the Truman-Dewey contest of 1948 (51 percent).

Thus, the 1972 turnout of 55 percent was not only well above the real low points of the contemporary political era; it was only slightly below the 58 percent average for the 10-election period. And while 1972 turnout was well below the average for the five elections from 1952 to 1968 (61 percent), it was just equal to the average of the five elections from 1932 to 1948 (55 percent).

Mr. Kagay pinpointed, moreover, two factors peculiar to the 1972 turnout:

There was no "horse race" at all; Richard Nixon began 25 points or more ahead of George McGovern in the polls and ended up on Election Day 23 points ahead in the vote. Mr. Kagay believes it was difficult, in such circumstances, for anyone to consider his or her vote "crucial."

Second, 18-to-20-year-olds were suddenly added to the ranks of potential voters in 1972—but first-time voters have less chance to register, have less opportunity to get the "voting habit," and are more mobile and likely to be away from home on Election Day than older voters; hence, young people traditionally have the lowest turnout of any group. The sudden appearance of millions of new voters in the pool of potential voters was almost bound to lower the overall turnout rate in 1972.

By comparison, the 1976 campaign looks like a "horse race" to practically everybody, with Gerald Ford predicting the biggest upset since 1948 (but remember, in 1948, it was universally assumed that Harry Truman had no chance to defeat Thomas E. Dewey, one good reason for that year's low turnout). As a consequence, more people may think their vote matters this year. The sudden impact of the 18-to-20-year-olds has been moderated in the four years since 1972, as young people have had more time to register and several chances to get the voting habit.

Finally, Mr. Kagay, at least, believes that voter alienation may have reached a peak and is now declining, as the shocks of Vietnam and Watergate recede. For all these reasons, he expects a turnout "several points" above the 55 percent recorded in 1972 and points out that if participation reached 58 percent this time, that would just equal the overall average of the 40 years from 1932 to 1968.

Looked at another way, 1972 turnout dipped six points below the average of the 1950's and 1960's (61 percent). Assuming that half the drop was due to alienation and the other half to the "peculiar features" of 1972 (no horse race, the new voters), Mr. Kagay believes that half the drop might be regained in 1976 by the absence of the "peculiar features," even if alienation is as bad this year as it was then.

The announcement of the Gallup findings attributed the eight-point increase in voter interest to the tightening of the race and the three Presidential debates held in the months between the August and late October surveys. That suggests another interesting possibility. The highest voter turnout in the entire period from 1932 to 1972 was the 63 percent recorded in 1960—the only other year in which there were televised debates between th Presidential candidates.

Whatver the reason, Dr. Gallup ma... have brought the best news yet ... Jimmy Carter—since the next ... conventional wisdom of the ca... is that a big turnout would in... help the majority party.

U.S. Contracts Unit Urged Not to Alter Civil Rights Rules

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28—A coalition of civil rights and women's rights groups is urging the Office of Federal Contracts Compliance to reconsider proposed regulations that they feel will weaken civil rights protection for employees of Federal contractors.

The groups, in a meeting with reporters yesterday, appeared most disturbed by a proposal to raise the number of employees required to be employed by contractors before a Federal contract must be reviewed prior to being awarded.

Four Hearings Scheduled

The National Urban League, in a related move, demanded that the Government withdraw its proposal to review only the larger contractors, leaving to contracting agencies the review of smaller ones.

The groups said they were dismayed that the Government had done no study of the possible impact of the policy change, and asked for an extension of their Nov. 18 deadline for responding to the proposal.

A spokesman for the compliance office said today that hearings would be conducted at four regional sites to give citizens a chance to express their views on the regulations proposed.

Because of the timing of the hearings and the time needed to organize, the hearings are not likely to end until just before Christmas, he said.

However, the Government has no plans to extend the Nov. 18 deadline for written comment, it was learned.

Women's groups, especially, have been concerned about a proposal to limit Federal compliance reviews—in which there is an inquiry to see if contractors are living up to promises to hire and promote more women and minorities—to contractors with a minimum of $10 million in contracts.

Government's Reasoning

The ruling would have the effect of eliminating most colleges and universities from surveillance by the Office of Federal Contracts Compliance, the women's groups charge.

The theory behind the proposal to raise the threshold for a compliance review is to focus limited Federal resources to reviewing progress by the largest and leading employers.

But some critics see in the move an effort to reduce paper work requirements and "Federal interference" with thousands of small independent contractors, in line with campaign promises by the President.

In another change, the proposed regulations would require only employers of 100 or more people, seeking a contract of $100,000 or more, to submit a plan hiring an equitable number of women and members of minority groups. This contrasts with existing requirements covering employers of 50, seeking contracts of $50,000 or more.

A Labor Department source said this new rule would reduce the coverage to 23 percent of the number previously covered. But he said 85 percent of the previously covered employees would still be protected.

One director of a regional office of the Office of Federal Contracts Compliance said today: "I think that further discussions of these changes and the implications will cause us to modify these proposals."

The only thing stopping us, is us!

There is absolutely nothing this nation cannot do. We have the capital, the resources, and above all, the human talent to accomplish any task—to reach any goal.

We can end inflation
We can end poverty and lonely existence
We can expand industry to provide decent jobs for every able-bodied person
We can beautify our cities and countryside
We can heal our sick and dignify life for our elderly
We can end the ugly remnants of race and sex and religious discrimination
We can indeed become one nation, under God, with liberty and justice for all.

There is nothing we cannot do if we make up our minds to do it. And if our present leader can't do these things—then elect leaders who can.

they get to me they have been going to school four years." she says, "How can a teacher pass a kid on without the kid knowing anything?"

To a stranger, her classroom appears to be in bedlam. Many of the children seem to have no attention span. Some wander out of the room. When they do, Mrs. Stevens walks to the door and firmly walks them back to their seats. The plump, brown-skinned woman, her large eyeglasses perched on her nose, repeats this all day long.

The children constantly drift from their seats. A few of them sit attentively but they are overshadowed by the disorder.

Mrs. Stevens is barely able to pick up her chalk before she must stop to reprimand a child. It becomes a litany: "My friend James, please sit down . . . - Richard, remove yourself from the group . . . Remember the rule children: you must not yell out in class . . . Excuse me Mr. Thompson—class, we will wait for Mr. Thompson . . . No, no, little girl, that is inappropriate behavior . . . - Charles, please explain to the class why you are taking up so much of their time . . ."

Realities of Teaching

Like most teachers, Mrs. Stevens has been forced to teach under trying circumstances since the fiscal crisis. She is responsible for teaching her large class all subjects. There is no reading lab or separate science class, for instance.

Added to her work load are the harsh realities of teaching in a school where poverty often blights the children's lives. There are children in the school who come from stable homes and who are motivated to learn, but she is often given the most difficult classes.

Animal Farm Folds at Auction er a Game Fight to Survive in Town

sby, auctioneer, asks bids on a turtle at the auction of the Grand Game Farm in Suffield, Conn.

By MICHAEL KNIGHT
Special to The New York Times

SUFFIELD, Conn., Oct. 28—The kinkajou went for $85, a pair of ferrets for $115 and two rare black swans for $162.50 each as a public auction that nearly everyone hoped could be avoided was held today to sell the stock of the Grand Game Farm here.

Nothing was spared by the auctioneer, who sold a 6-year-old chimpanzee for a bargain $525, then unloaded its 3-year-old mate for $425 and finally auctioned off the fence around their communal cage for $5.

Hundreds of people from throughout the Northeast—curious suburbanites, tight-lipped gentlemen in expensive Stetson hats and fancy cowboy boots, and rough-looking backwoods types—came to bid on scores of animals that included deer, bear, bison and elk. Others, wrawn by advertisements in the local papers, were there to watch the unsual sale and to shake their heads at the events that had led to the farm's demise today.

Opposition by Two Sisters

Among the people who did not turn out were Anastasia and Jeanette Sheridan, retired schoolteachers who live across the road from the farm in this picture-book New England town on the Massachusetts border. The two sisters, by all accounts, are largely responsible —through a series of lawsuits and other actions—for the farm's demise.

"Somebody else might have fought on and fought on, but after what they and the town put us through, we decided it wasn't going to be us," explained Arnold Gould, one of the farm's owners, before the auctioneer began the sale by selling off boxes of African masks, Indian moccasins, jack-o-lanterns and other items from the farm's log-cabin gift shop.

Mr. Gould and his partner, Earl Waterman Jr., had been fighting to keep and build their game farm for eight years in the face of opposition by the sisters and a web of local government bureaucracy that became increasingly tangled, even up here amid the corn and tobacco fields of the Connecticut River Valley.

"We just don't have the heart to fight any more, and the town and its children and everyone who likes to look at animals and learn about them will be the losers," Mr. Gould said. "We just give up."

About 15,000 people a year visited the farm, most of them schoolchildren on field trips from communities between Hartford and Springfield, Mass. Admission was free for Suffield children, as well for those attending the numerous schools for the retarded in this area.

"There's just nothing like this around, and we're going to miss it," said Rick Jensen, an instructor in the Suffield schools' vocational agriculture program. "Without this place, a lot of our kids will just be lost and drifting around. I think the whole town will miss it eventually."

Most of the animals were bought by animal dealers, other game farms, municipal zoos and small-time circuses. But some of the smaller animals went to people looking for exotic pets, like the white-haired lady who bought four white turkey hens and a peacock hen —$35 for the lot.

"I've been waiting all day for these birds," she told the auctioneer, Milt Crosby.

"Well, then I'm real glad you got 'em, lady," Mr. Crosby replied, continuing: "Now, what can I get for this thing —what is it, Earl?—it's called a black rock squirrel, and you all need one, don't you folks?"

Big Hopes in 1968

Mr. Gould, who was in the sign-erection business, and Mr. Waterman, who still drives a truck under contract to the Postal Service, started the farm in 1968 with a single bison bull and big hopes. They bought 75 acres of field and woods here sandwiched between the Consolidated Cigar Corporation's fields and a cemetery, cut a few dirt paths and began building pens for their animals.

What they did not have was the permission of the Suffield Planning and Zoning Commission and the goodwill of the Sheridan sisters, their neighbors.

The two men contended that they had received a verbal go-ahead from the commission.

Blair Childs, an aircraft company purchasing agent who heads the Suffield zoning commission, said that the panel had not denied the farm's most recent application and, in fact, would like to approve it if it conformed with the new regulations.

"I still think they could be in business today," Mr. Childs said, "but they just can't seem to cope with the way things are done nowadays."

Jimmy Carter's campaign for the Democratic Presidential nomination was sometimes called "brilliant," but his fall campaign against President Ford has been less sure-footed and his standing in the polls has dropped precipitously. Mr. Carter's slippage has been attributed to many factors, including what some regard as intemperate attacks on Mr. Ford and in distractions that diverted attention from his major themes and that at times were frivolous and made him appear to be losing control of events. [A1:1-2.]

Criminal fraud charges could result from an effort by New York City's municipal hospitals to admit Medicaid patients only to increase the flow of Federal and state Medicaid reimbursement funds. The warning was made by Stephen Berger, executive director of the State Emergency Financial Control Board. Any such practice was denied by Dr. John L. S. Holloman Jr., president of the city's Health and Hospitals Corporation. [A1:6.]

The New York State senatorial campaign, which began on a low key, has increasingly become a hard-fought contest involving bitter charges. Daniel P. Buckley was "so consistently uncaring, so consistently arrogant toward us that if it did not exist it would be impossible to invent it." [B6:2-3.] Senator Buckley, campaigning hard in Harlem, won pledges of support amid expressions of coolness of traditionally Democratic black voters to Mr. Moynihan. [B6:1.]

The State Board of Regents urged New York City to extend tuition assistance to undergraduates at the City University whose families earned no more than $14,000 a year. The recommendation was made to help the city retain middle-class families who might otherwise move following the university's recent dropping of its free-tuition policy. [B18:1-2.]

Business/Finance

The trend of lower interest rates continued as the Continental Illinois National Bank and Trust Company said it would trim its prime lending rate to 6½ percent from 6¾ percent, effective at once. Continental is the nation's seventh largest bank with assets of more than $22 billion. There were no immediate followers, and officials of several large New York banks said they would resist a new cut in prime rates. [D1:6.]

The nation's trade balance fell again last month as imports exceeded exports by $778.9 million, the Commerce Department announced. The deficit, widened from $757.7 million in August, brought the total trade imbalance for 1976 to $3.4 billion. [D1:3.]

Stock prices eased after two sessions of active advances. The Dow Jones industrial average, reflecting narrow changes throughout the trading, dipped 3.49 points to close at 952.63. [D1:3-4.] The credit markets, in a lackluster day, moved up and down in narrow ranges several times and closed with small gains. [D2:3.] In commodity markets, gold and cocoa beans rose sharply in price. [D12:4-6.]

State Senator Assails Law Keeping Criminal Court From Weighing Juvenile Record of Defendant

By PETER KIHSS

The chairman of the New York State Senate's Committee on Crime yesterday broke the rules of confidentiality on Family Court records to charge angrily that a 19-year-old robbery defendant had a long background of juvenile delinquency, including the murder of a 92-year-old man.

The chairman, Senator Ralph J. Marino, in a statement, bitterly added that laws had prevented bringing the juvenile records to the attention of a judge in Criminal Court. Last Tuesday, the judge set bail for the defendant at only $500, Mr. Marino said, in his latest arrest for robbing and beating an 82-year-old woman in her Bronx apartment.

Senator Marino and the committee counsel, Jeremiah McKenna, said they had got the case history of the defendant, Ronald E. Timmons, as part of a citywide survey of robbery and homicide arrests drawn from Family Court and police records.

The survey is to go into a report still being prepared, which was to have identified the cases only by first names.

Mr. Timmons, Senator Marino declared, "has been in and out of state training schools since the age of 8," and "he was known to the police and the juvenile authorities as a cruel predator of old people."

In Court 67 Times

"His juvenile record," Senator Marino, an Oyster Bay, L.I., Republican, went on, "shows 67 separate court appearances as a juvenile, and on some days Timmons was appearing in five and six different parts of the court on different charges."

Mr. McKenna said Mr. Timmons had five cases pending in Family Court—whose jurisdiction extends to the age of 16—when he allegedly became involved in the murder on Oct. 25, 1972.

According to Mr. McKenna, on Oct. 25 Mr. Timmons and another youth allegedly rang an apartment doorbell, and when a 92-year-old man opened the door, they reportedly rushed in, tied and gagged him. When the man still managed to yell, Mr. McKenna said, they allegedly beat him. The man died in a hospital four or five days later.

The police, Mr. McKenna said, arrested the two youths the same day of the beating, although at that time they did not tie them to that case. Both youths were remanded to a State Youth Division training school at Otisville, he said.

In February 1973, Mr. McKenna said, they were given a weekend pass for a visit home and failed to return. On Feb. 15, he said, they were seized on warrants and also charged in connection with the murder.

Last Tuesday, the 43d Police Precinct station house, at 900 Fteley Avenue in the Bronx, received an alarm of trouble at 2055 St. Raymond Avenue. Two plainclothes detectives, Larry Meyer and Morris Schwaber, reported finding Adelaide Fleming, 82, severely beaten, and two men in the apartment.

Suspects Seized

They identified the suspects as Mr. Timmons, of 1420 Washington Avenue, and Zachary Shannon, 22, of 481 East 171st Street, both of the Bronx. Mr. Timmons, the police said, fought arrest so vigorously that it took the help of two uniformed police officers to overpower him.

The two suspects were charged with assault, robbery, the possesion of weapons and resisting arrest. Assistant District Attorney Louis Fishman asked for $25,000 bail.

District Attorney Mario Merola said yesterday that the records of Mr. Timmons and Mr. Shannon were known to the police even though they could not be cited under existing law.

Judge Jerome Kidder set bail at $2,500 bond or $500 cash, and Mr. Shannon soon produced the cash and was released. Both defendants appeared Wednesday before Judge Murray Koening, but the case was put off until next Wednesday because the injured witness could not appear.

Yesterday, Judge Kidder confirmed that juvenile and youthful offender records were sealed so that a judge in Criminal Court could not consider them. He added:

"Sometimes we get a couple of hundred cases a day. That doesn't give a great deal of time to go into a case in depth. Even I can slip up sometimes. It is possible if I had known more, I might have fixed higher bail."

Senator Marino said, "These absurd laws have to be changed." He asserted that he would push for passage of a law that would at least make it possible for an arraigning judge to "consider a long juvenile history of crimes against the elderly when determining bail for the very same crime."

Wesley Williams at the wheel of a Christy steam engine, outside Engine 55, 363 Broome Street, in 1919. He was given the job because of his experience as a truck driver for the U.S. Post Office.

City Firemen Hail Once-Scorned 'Chief'

In 1919, Wesley Williams, one of New York City's first black firemen and eventually its first black battalion chief, walked into his first city firehouse. The other firemen walked out in initial protest, then ostracized him.

Last night, at the age of 80, "The Chief" was the guest of honor at a dinner in the State Office Building at 125th Street and Seventh Avenue in Harlem, and more than 350 firemen, policemen, other Civil Service employees and community workers came to pay tribute.

Borough President Percy E. Sutton of Manhattan was there, and so was Fire Commissioner Joseph T. O'Hagan.

Mr. Williams was there because as he put it, "I prefer smelling roses while my nose is in good condition."

The rest of Mr. Williams isn't too bad either. He swims three times weekly at the Harlem Y.M.C.A. on 135th Street, lifts weights and is a devotee of vitamins and health foods. He looks, in fact, very much as he did when he became a fireman in 1919 and took up weight-lifting.

Gross Rejection Recalled

A school dropout in the second decade of this century, Mr. Williams studied and read on his own, and when he entered the Fire Department, he passed the written test strongly and was "the only man out of 1,700 applicants to pass the physical with a perfect score of 100," according to a 1919 newspaper clipping.

On the day he walked into Engine 55 on Broome Street, the captain of the company took off his uniform and walked out. Other firemen walked out of the firehouse and up to its roof, and when Mr. Williams attempted to join them, they walked back downstairs.

"For months it was like that," Mr. Williams said in a recent interview. "My job was to clean up the building, and they would urinate in the spittoons.

"They filled my boots with excrement and damaged my uniforms. There was even one guy who went into the kitchen behind me, breaking plates and glasses I used at dinner, and nobody hardly said a word, except when they were challenging me to a fistfight." Which he always won.

"I could not have stayed on the job if I lost," he said. "There was no Human Rights Commission, and you couldn't go complaining to a civil-rights group. They would have thought I was a weakling and trampled me. In those days you stood up alone and put knuckle to jaw."

Alone in a crowded firehouse, Mr. Williams leaned on the lessions he had been taught by his father, a Grand Central terminal redcap, and on childhood lessions in body-building and yoga. He lifted weights and studied.

Excelled as Weight-Lifter

Mr. Williams lifted 3,600 pounds at his hips and 625 pounds in a dead-lift with one arm. When the national heavyweight 'clean-and-jerk' record was 250 pounds, Mr. Williams was lifting 345 pounds. This despite a height of 5 feet 8 inches and a weight that never rose above 180 pounds.

He was also a swimmer, a boxer, a ball player, and he kept to his disciplines. He was made a lieutenant in 1927, a captain in 1934 and a battalion chief in 1938. He retired in 1951.

Mr. Williams was married three times and outlived all three wives.

"You know, I'm too old for marriage now," he says, "but the truth is that at my age when you see a pretty woman whom you like a lot, you feel just as silly as you did when you were 18."

These days the Chief lives on his $250 a-week pension, which is usually spent pretty quickly on food, athletic equipment, books on natural history, memory improvement and ways to "do it yourself." He doesn't mind not having savings, he said, because you never saw a Brink's truck taking money to the cemetery."

Carey Expands Ethics Regulat To Over 10,000 State Empl

By LINDA GREENHOUSE

Governor Carey expanded his financial-disclosure and conflict-of-interest regulations yesterday to cover more than 10,000 state employees who were exempted from the original regulations he issued 18 months ago.

The Governor also ordered his budget director and his chief patronage dispenser to review all state boards and commissions and identify those whose jobs require only part-time work while offering full-time pay. Mr. Carey said all such jobs would have their pay levels reduced in the budget he will submit to the Legislature in January.

Last month, the Board of Public Disclosure, which enforces the Governor's ethics regulations, reported to him that there were dozens of state jobs, paying $30,000 to $50,000 a year, that should be either eliminated or paid on a part-time basis.

All Recommendations Accepted

But the seven-member Disclosure Board, which is headed by Charles S. Desmond, a former Chief Judge of the State Court of Appeals, did not have the manpower to identify all jobs in this category.

In issuing Executive Order No. 10.1 yesterday, Mr. Carey, in effect, accepted all the recommendations contained in the board's first annual report last month.

The Governor has often described his original ethics order, Executive Order No. 10, as the stiffest set of regulations in the country governing behavior by state employees.

It required all non-Civil Service employees who either earned at least $30,000 a year or who held "policy-making positions" to file an annual statement of their financial holdings and prohibited them from holding any political office or engaging in outside employment. About 2,000 employees were

U.S. Grants New York Transit Projects $90 Million

By EDWARD C. BURKS

The Federal Government announced grants of nearly $90 million yesterday for transit projects in the New York City area, including an experiment in hovercraft commutation. But it also warned that the city must soon stop using capital-grant money to meet transit operating deficits.

Robert E. Patricelli, the Urban Mass Transportation Administrator, came here from Washington to give details of the grants for subway and commuter rail modernization and for new suburban buses, as well as to issue the warning about deficits.

During a news conference at the headquarters of the Metropolitan Transportation Authority at 1700 Broadway, Mr. Patricelli indicated that he might approve one last use of capital money—about $20 million—to balance the transit operating deficit for the fiscal year ending next June 30.

But then, he said, the city and state should provide a "regional taxing mechanism" or some other device to meet these recurring operating deficits.

David L. Yunich, the M.T.A. chairman, who keeps juggling a mind-boggling set of figures to plug revenue holes in the leaky transit budget, estimates the "real shortfall is about $21 million." If the budget is plugged—and stays plugged—riders are assured of no increase in the fare through next June 30.

Arriving in New York near the eve of the Presidential elecion, Mr. Patricelli denied that Ford Administration politicking was involved. He said that his agency customarily "put out grants" approximately every 90 days. Describing transit grants as providing "more bang for the buck for central cities than any plan I can think of," he announced the following list:

¶A $995,000 two-year experiment using three 84-passenger Hovercraft Corporation air-cushioned vessels on the Hudson and East Rivers. The Hovercraft would provide substitute for the night ferryboat service to Staten Island and day service between Manhattan and such areas as Riverdale and Co-op City in the Bronx and La Guardia Airport.

The subways will receive $60 million, mainly for the second year of the systems rehabilitation program, while $20 million will provide signal and track improvements on the areas commuter rail railroads. Suburban bus riders will benefit from $8.8 million for new buses, which is new equipment, including radios for 235 older buses and the installation of 100 bus shelters.

Morgenthau Announces Shifts In the District Attorney's Office

District Attorney Robert M. Morgenthau of Manhattan yesterday announced administrative changes in his office to fill positions left vacant after John F. Keenan, who had been chief assistant, was appointed special prosecutor last June.

Perre N. Leva, 40 years od, who had been first assistant, has been named chief assistant to replace Mr. Keenan.

Silvio J. Mollo, 65, who had been administrative assistant, will assume the position of first assistant. Mr. Morgenthau said the position of administration assistant will remain vacant.

In addition, Richard B. Lowe 3d, 35, was made chief of the trial division and Linda A. Faistein, 29, was appointed chief of the specialized sex crimes prosecution unit.

STATEMENT OF SANITARY CONDITION OF SHELLFISH LANDS IN NEW YORK STATE

The following is a statement of sanitary condition of shellfish lands in New York State as of October 18, 1976, excerpted from Part 41 of the Official Compilation of Codes, Rules and Regulations of the State of New York. Notice of changes in classification will be sent to baymen by mail as and when they may occur. Whenever used in this Part 41:

(a) the term "mile" refers to statute mile;

(b) the term "monument" refers to a permanent post or marker place on or near the shore by the Environmental Conservation Department to serve as a landmark in establishing the line of closure.

Section 41.1 Shellfish Lands in Westchester, Bronx, Kings, New York, Richmond and Queens Counties.

(a) The shellfish lands in Westchester, Bronx, Kings, New York, Richmond and Queens Counties, except the one listed in subdivision (b), are in such sanitary condition that shellfish therein shall not be taken for use as food, and all such shellfish lands are designated uncertified areas.

(b) The following area in Queens County is in such sanitary condition that surf clams therein may be taken for use as food, and it is, therefore, designated a certified area to that extent:

Atlantic Ocean.

1. All that area of the Atlantic Ocean lying east of a line extending southeasterly from GONG R "4", located at the entrance to East Rockaway Inlet, through Buoy R "4" WHISTLE, located at the southwestern corner of the Fish Haven is certified for the taking of shellfish.

Note: All reference points for this area taken from U.S.C. & G.S. Nautical Chart 1215 dated July 18, 1970.

"It sounds like every day in my life," said Mr. Conway, who traveled to WMCA's Manhattan offices after he had completed his summation to a jury in a murder trial in Hackensack. "This is a nice idea—talking to some lawyer, and it doesn't cost anything."

It was probably the first time that lawyers in the metropolitan area had done anything quite like this. Some lawyers did not participate because, they said, they were uncomfortable about giving legal advice by phone to strangers when the full facts were not known. But by the end of Wednesday's session, the New Jersey lawyers and the people from WMCA were exploring ways of institutionalizing the service.

Lawyers' Enthusiasm Cited

"It was just sensational the way the lawyers were bubbling with enthusiasm," said Susan Sicher, who runs "Ask the Expert," a service of the station that assembles a group of experts on various subjects and sits them down at phones to answer callers' questions. The service began last month with experts from the Consumer Credit Counseling Service, a private nonprofit agency, and will continue next month with experts from the American Academy of Pediatrics.

The "Ask the Expert" service is a spinoff of WMCA's "Call for Action," where listeners call volunteers who help them cut through the red tape of bureaucracies. Both "Ask the Expert" and "Call for Action" are not broadcast.

"Call for Action" has been on the air for 13 years, and legal problems are the third most common problem that listners have—just behind consumer and housing problems.

"If people were more satisfied with day-to-day services of the legal profession, we might not have done this," said Ellen Sulzberger Straus, who founded "Call for Action" along with her husband, R. Peter Straus, the owner of WMCA.

For the last two days, there was nothing in it for the lawyer-volunteers except sore ears, all the coffee they could drink, as much of a five-foot-long hero sandwich from Manganaro's as they could eat, a little image polishing and a sense of satisfaction.

"I get a great sense of gratification from this," said Bernard Rudd, a lawyer from Short Hills, N.J., during one of the breaks. "It's very intense work. One hour on the phone could be three days' work."

As fresh lawyers took over the phones, the others were debriefed by WMCA volunteers. The lawyers, many of whom are ordinarily adversaries in the courtroom, joked and bantered and talked about their clients.

Narcotics Use Again a Worry At City College

City College officials are considering whether to ask the police to come onto the campus to help curb an increase in illegal drug sales that they say has developed since the college completed a "drug cleanup" last spring.

The dean of students, Dr. Ann Rees, said the college was "trying to ascertain the extent" of the drug traffic, which officials believe involves only marijuana and hashish, and "whether it is necessary to bring in outside help." Dr. Rees said the college would ask for undercover police officers on campus only "if we can find evidence that there is large drug trafficking."

Detective Charles Delaney of the West 126th Street station house indicated yesterday that the police were "surveying" the situation more "actively" since the college had contacted them this month. He pointed out that narcotics officers could be deployed at any time on the City College campus without the consent of the school, as they were in 1970, when 10 persons were arrested, eight of them City College students, for selling drugs.

Finley Center Involved

Most of the recent drug use appears to be concentrated in the Finley Student Center, at 133d Street and Convent Avenue. Dr. Robert E. Marshak, the college president, said illegal drug sales "had picked up" there since September. He said this was so because after a "successful" cleanup drive was completed in June, there was a "tendency to relax" the enforcement of the college's policy on drug abuse. Dr. Marshak made his remarks after a student newspaper earlier this month reported that student dealers were doing a thriving business.

Officials began the cleanup last March, when a college committee recommended that a long-time proposal for an on-campus beer hall not be established until the level of drug abuse had been reduced.

Groups of three faculty members began patrolling areas where there was drug use to "eliminate" the use of marijuana and "educate" the students on drug abuse, and it was announcesd that the drug policy would be stringently enforced. That policy, which was republished and distributed throughout the campus yesterday, states that any student selling marijuana or hashish on campus is to be suspended and that those found with a sizable quantity of the drug or any quantity of a harder drug will be turned over to the police.

Heroin Smuggler Convicted

A 42-year-old Bangkok businessman was convicted by a Federal District Court jury in Brooklyn yesterday of trying to smuggle nearly 14 pounds of heroin into this country from Thailand. The drugs were said by Carol Amen, an assistant United States attorney, to have been concealed in a pedestal of a religious object brought here in a freighter from Hong Kong. The businessman, Prasarn Bhongsupatana, faces up to 30 years in prison.

The Essex House and the office building were closed in 1968 because of declining income and rising taxes.

When the Essex House is razed, the one-third acre it occupies will reportedly be converted into a park for the elderly, including bocci ball courts, shuffleboard courts and gardens. The city also plans to acquire, and then demolish, two deteriorated tenements behind the office building, and the space will be used as a parking lot for at least 180 cars the sources said.

Beame Asks U.S. to Bear Cost of Fighting Narcotics

Mayor Beame called on the Federal Government yesterday to assume the cost of operating the Police Department's Narcotics Division and the cost of all other parts of the criminal justice system "dealing with drug-related crime." He called it a national problem.

The Mayor, in a news conference at Police Headquarters, said "best estimates" showed that 100,000 drug addicts lived in New York City, or "35 to 40 percent of the nation's drug addicts," while the city received only 3 percent of the Federal funds allocated to narcotics enforcement, treatment, and prevention.

Blue Cross Rise Barred

Insurance Commissioner T. F. Gilroy Daly of Connecticut has rejected a 21 percent rate increase sought by Connecticut Blue Cross for 96,000 subscribers, saying the organization had failed to act to hold down hospital costs. Mr. Gilroy said that the increase for direct payment programs was "excessive" and that "Blue Cross introduced no evidence whatever, that the proposed rates represented the lowest possible increase necessary to sustain the plans in question." The decision was the first by Mr. Daly since he took over a month ago from his predecessor, Jay W. Jackson, who had said Blue Cross should be "more than a mere collection agency for hospitals." Still pending before Mr. Daly is another rate increase of 19.4 percent sought by Blue Cross for 350,000 group-plan members.

L.I. Town Aide Fined

Gerard P. Trotta, former Commissioner of Public Works in the Town of Oyster Bay, L.I., was fined $500 following his plea of guilty to a charge of pressing for contributions to the town's Republican committee. In pronouncing sentence, Judge John R. Bartels declared in Federal Court in Brooklyn that he had not been impressed with the testimony of the Government's chief witness at the trial before the guilty plea halted it, and that he thought the Government's case had been weak.

Welfare Handbook Issued

A revised 160-page Manual for Welfare Advocates in New York City has just been published by Community Action for Legal Services, 335 Broadway. The group channels Federal operating funds for civil legal services to the poor to 16 neighborhood law offices and about a fourth of the Legal Aid Society's civil division. The handbook, which discusses eligibility, hearing and other problems, is priced at $2.50 a copy, for general sale, and $1 for unemployed people.

Sonia Landau blows the whistle on Ed Koch.

What did Ed Koch do while 6 categories of major crime increased 84.9% in the 18th Congressional district during his eight years in office?

According to Police Department statistics, major crimes between 1968 and 1975 rose more than twice as fast in our district as they did in the rest of Manhattan. For instance, rape in the 18th C.D. rose 114.3% vs. 95.9%; robbery increased 86.3% vs. 21.1%; and muggings climbed 90.5% vs. 32.3%. In category after category, this district's rate of major crimes has substantially outpaced Manhattan's as a whole. What has Ed Koch proposed? Instead of developing an effective plan, his answer to the crime wave was to hand out whistles.

Where was Ed Koch when New York City's worst fiscal crisis was developing?

Why didn't Ed Koch see the signs of New York's fiscal collapse and offer effective congressional leadership in rallying support for our city? When he was due to move up in the important House Banking, Currency and Housing Committee, Ed Koch quit in order to join another committee. In doing that, he abandoned a position which would have given him the power to help write the legislation to aid this district, and this city, when we needed help the most. While many congressmen strive to get on committees that are relevant to the needs of their districts, Koch shunned that responsibility.

Sonia Landau's first order of business, if she's elected, is to get on the very committee Ed Koch quit.

Will Ed Koch pledge to serve out his term if elected as congressman and not run for mayor?

The voters of the 18th Congressional district will be the losers if Ed Koch runs for mayor of this city. There is an inevitable conflict of interest if he's running for mayor while he's running for Congress. The more time he spends running for mayor, the less time he can spend working for our district in Washington. The 18th Congressional district needs a full time Representative.

How many pieces of legislation directed at the needs and interests of our district has Ed Koch initiated and passed during his last term.

One—according to his most recent report to his constituency.

It's ironic that a Congressional district such as ours, one of the most creative, intelligent and influential in the United States should be so underrepresented.

Ed Koch has had 4 terms—8 years, in which to demonstrate leadership for our district in Congress. He hasn't.

This district deserves more than it has been getting from Ed Koch. Much more.

Sonia Landau provides an alternative. A Republican, she has spent three years on assignment in Washington advising congressmen on issues and working with national media. She knows how to get things done in Washington. She serves on Mayor Beame's Task Force On Rape, and has worked with a National Traffic Research Project, Hillel Academy and the National Artificial Kidney Foundation. She is a member of the National Academy of Television Arts & Sciences, the City Club of New York and Common Cause.

Ed Koch had eight years to deliver and hasn't. It's time someone else has a chance to serve our district. And that person is Sonia Landau.

PARENTS/CHILDREN

In the Nursery, Some Nightmares And a Lot of Ordinary Dreaming

By RICHARD FLASTE

A child who had been sleeping peacefully just moments before sits straight up in bed and shrieks. He is inconsolable. The parents ask, even implore, what's wrong? But there is no answer. Soon the crying subsides, the child returns to sleep, the "night terrors" have ended.

Or a scared 4-year-old comes rushing into the parents' darkened room and wants to know, with the greatest of urgency, "Do monsters really kill people?"

To a parent, the anguish might make a child's nighttime appear to be a perpetual Halloween, only worse. What else could you think, if the only dreaming you knew about was what the child reported after being frightened?

But sleep researchers in recent years have been learning a good deal more about the content of children's dreams. One of those researchers, Dr. David Foulkes, a psychologist at the University of Wyoming, who has studied preschoolers and school-age children over a five-year period, said the other day, "In my experience parents have a biased view of kids' dreaming. The most striking finding of the research is just how ordinary the dreams really are, rarely frightening and fantastic."

Animals Are Symobls

He said that children of 3 or 4 tended to dream about family matters although often the dreaming was in terms of animal symbolism. "It's clear," he said, "the animals are relating to each other as the family would."

The reason for the symbolism, Dr. Foulkes speculates, could be that adults so often tell children stories about animals. But it's also the children's own language, their way of seeing themselves as animal-like, small and dependent. In their minds, Dr. Foulkes said, "there's not yet a clear dividing line between animal and human."

A typical dream that Dr. Foulkes recalls was the one in which a boy of 4 or 5 imagined "there was some problem about keeping a gerbil in a cage." It wasn't scarey, just matter-of-fact. And it struck Dr. Foulkes that this dream "related rather nicely" to the everyday problem children of that age have with learning to control their impulses.

"Children," he said, "dream about what matters to them." A school-age child who is the younger of two might dream that he and his older brother and his father went fishing and the father caught 10 fish, the older brother two and he caught one. Dr. Foulkes wouldn't see that as needing any special interpretation; it's just an extension of reality—a reflection of how life goes when you're the younger brother.

While the preponderance of dreaming might involve ordinary relationships with families and friends, children undeniably do have nightmares. And sometimes they have what appear to be nightmares but are not. Those shrieking "night terrors," for instance, are evidently unrelated to bad dreams.

Researchers can tell when a child (or an adult) is dreaming because the child moves into one of the cyclical periods of sleep marked by rapid eye movements beneath the closed lids.

But the night terrors almost never happen during dreaming periods. So what causes that alarming awakening?

Since parents mostly hear only about the frightening dreams, a child's nighttime might seem like a perpetual Halloween.

"We don't know exactly," said Dr. Christian Guilleminault, a psychiatrist who is associate director of the sleep disorders clinic at Stanford University. "But in children it's fairly normal and happens mostly when a child is slightly more fatigued, usually during the first part of the night, and there's no remembrance of it in the morning." Children generally outgrow it, he said.

Then there are the problems that seem to emerge during a half-sleep, when a child is 3 or 4 and hearing noises in the dark—"It's more like imaginings than a dream," Dr. Guilleminault said.

He said that genuine nightmares, sometimes called anxiety dreams, happen "particularly if something frightening has occurred just before sleep or they've heard something they don't fully understand that they interpret in ways that leave them anxious during wakefulness and it continues into the sleep."

When such anxiety dreams regularly take place, Dr. Guilleminault sees them as an indication that there may be something wrong in the family.

He tells, for instance, of the woman who was terrified that her daughter would stop breathing in the night. She kept checking on the girl, "opening the door, closing the door, and the anxiety of the mother was so obvious that the child felt it and became anxious, too. She began to dream that she was being pushed under a pillow and killed and taken away, night after night, until by 4½ she refused to go to sleep."

This refusal was more extreme, of course, than the ordinary reluctance many children express about going to sleep—reluctance that is generally overcome by gentle bedtime rituals such as story-telling.

Normal, infrequent nightmares that grow out of anxiety resulting from something that happenes during the day can be defused, Dr. Guilleminault said, by simply talking it all out before the child goes to sleep—if the parent is lucky enough to learn about the problem.

If a child is awakened by a nightmare, Dr. Jarl Dyrud, a psychoanalyst at the University of Chicago, suggests that a little reassurance can go a long way.

Dr. Dyrud advises that the best thing for parents to do is "turn on the light—so the child can reorient himself—and explain that dreaming is the thinking you do when you're asleep."

He sees that as a lot better than "taking the absurd position of arguing with the child that something he thinks happened never did." If a parent can determine that a nightmare was the result of an actual event, Dr. Dyrud thinks it might be helpful to talk about the upsetting moment.

An interesting sidelight to dream research is that there appears to be a difference in the nature of boys' and girls' dreaming.

Dr. Foulkes found that both sexes seemed to have pretty much the same kinds of dreams most of the time, except at two periods in their lives.

Sense of Rivalry

He said that for boys at around 5 or 6 years of age the dreaming often "veers off course and becomes more frightening, with stranger characters." Girls, he said, don't reveal that change. And Dr. Foulkes wonders whether, for the boys, the fear might not have something to do with the growing sense of rivalry between son and father.

The girls, he said, differ from the boys at early adolescence. Both sexes, up until then, have their share of argumentative, fighting dreams. But at early adolescence girls seem to become more docile in their dreams, more friendly, more passive, he said. It's as if they've already learned society's lesson on feminity so well that they can do it in their sleep.

Cardin Joins Miniskirt Parade

Handkerchief-pointed minidress typifies Cardin's clothes for teen-agers.

The New York Times/Jean-Luce Huré

By BERNADINE MORRIS

Special to The New York Times

PARIS, Oct. 28—Pierre Cardin returned to the scene of an earlier triumph last night. He first came to prominence 20 years ago as a couturier with a knack for designing snappy coats and suits for young women. Later, he became known, along with André Courrèges, as a foremost exponent of the space-age look. He lent his name to such diverse products as motor cars and chocolates. He spurred the men's wear revolution with his brass-buttoned blazer and snug Edwardian cut in the 1960's.

At the Espace Cardin, the theater he built with the proceeds of some of his fashion successes, he showed a sweet, demure collection for teen-agers—"girls who are not yet women, without makeup, still pure," he said. He pinpointed the age as "16, maybe 15," which may be a bit high, but let it pass.

The clothes, of course, are of the mini variety that is sweeping Paris and since they are clearly geared to the very young they seem to make sense. Especially as play dresses at resort areas during the summer; you couldn't expect the ruffled bras and crisp tutu-like skirts to be worn to school, or could you?

Handkerchief-Pointed Minis

When they aren't flaring out all around the body, the skirts tend to dip in handkerchief points, and that's charming also. Cardin has a way with the handkerchief-pointed mini. Often, it's tied up on one shoulder like a tiny toga. Ponchos with a hole for the head are another version.

Ponchos and togas also top white leotards and tights for the teens-agers who wants to cover up a bit, and they can also be worn over blue jeans, though Cardin doesn't suggest it.

Whether the styles will survive a trans-Atlantic crossing is anybody's guess, but they certainly are in the spirit of the moment here. And at least Cardin's minis don't look bedraggled. They're in such fabrics as eyelet, warp-printed cotton or chintz. For sitting around the pool or watching friends play tennis, they're charming.

Culinary Olympics: De-Emphasizing the Inedible

By CRAIG R. WHITNEY.

Special to The New York Times

FRANKFURT, West Germany, Oct. 28—"I'm not crazy about inedible food," said Bruno H. Ellmer at the 14th International Culinary Olympics, which attracted entries from 20 countries and featured, among other things, a category for such inedible food.

"I was surprised to see so much of it here," he said, pointing to a larger-than-lifesize tallow sculpture of a farmer. Mr. Ellmer, who is from Hyde Park, N.Y., and was one of the American competitors, added, "We've been trying to get away from it in the United States." Most of the inedible dishes consisted of aspic-covered food; tallow sculptures and the like were few.

But others among the hundreds of cooks, apprentice cooks, and spectators assembled for this year's Olympics, which ended today with the Swiss team taking top honors, seemed to like it.

The participants included such gastronomic luminaries as mess sergeants from the West German Army, caterers of airline food from the Lufthansa kitchens here, and at least two international hotel chains — Sheraton and Intercontinental.

Most of what is displayed here is the kind of thing one sees at banquets and bar mitzvahs, not at temples of haute cuisine.

Erwin Schmilewski, who tempts palates at the Autobahn Motel near Nuremberg for a living, put together a 200-pound Dutch windmill made entirely of sugar. Its blades towered over him as he plugged a leak in its roof with a sugar mortar.

The exhibition halls of the Frankfurt fairgrounds are hangarlike structures filled the rest of the year with electronic equipment, furs, books or automobiles, depending on which trade fair is in town. This month, it's the Internationale Kochkunst Ausstellung, a show of the art of the kitchen, but it's tightly coupled to a commercial exhibit of hotel and restaurant equipment and supplies.

Always in Frankfurt

The connection with the winter and summer Olympics is completely unofficial, and the culinary competitions always take place in Frankfurt.

The American team's entry consisted of two dishes with enough food to feed several hundred people. The meal was cooked in the middle of the Grand Central Terminal Concourse-size food hall.

The 10-man group flew the team pennant of the American Culinary Federation Inc. and was led this year by a young man named Ferdinand Metz, the senior manager of new product development for Heinz U.S.A., the prepared foods company in Pittsburgh. The United States team wound up tied for third place with France, with Canada finishing second.

It was high noon and the prize jury, including chefs from Israel, France, Denmark, Austria and West Germany, was on its way to the American stand. The cooks were getting nervous. Mr. Metz sliced portions of the day's two dishes—filet of baby salmon in crust heritage, and boned stuffed duckling Pennsylvania Dutch—for the crucial tasting.

Auguste Guyet, a small but obviously not undernourished man who is president of the Société des Cuisiniers de Paris, moved from the neighboring Hungarian team to the Americans and took a portion of duck.

Hunched over a small plate on a nearby table, his eyes unrevealing behind his half-frame spectacles, he ate diligently and marked his score sheet. His own lapel was speckled with miniature medals.

The American team had trained since January, finishing up with a week in Chicago earlier this month, and had devised eight menus of new recipes using typically American ingredients.

Its coach, Richard Bosnjak, wore a blue blazer with an Olympic-style seal on the breast pocket. As the judges were tasting the duck, he confided, "It's good for the restaurant people, you know. The recipe gets four servings out of a duck. If you just roast a duck the traditional way, you only get two servings out of it."

A visitor looking for famous names—chefs from Maxim's of Paris, say, or La Caravelle in New York—doesn't find them at these Olympics. That isn't to say the competing cooks were amateurs, like their athletic counterparts. The French team's efforts were largely underwritten, they said, by the House of Carnier, whose liqueur bottles were prominently displayed on the kitchen counter.

Innovation was hardly the object. "We're not doing any nouvelle cuisine," said Jacky Freon, who works in Paris at the Concorde-Lafayette Hotel, one not even listed in the Guide Michelin, "What we do is strictly classical cuisine," he said.

Here it was gourmand de volaille, poultry in red wine sauce.

Winning a gold medal, Mr. Fréon admitted, helps attract customers to the restaurants the cooks work in. A gold medal goes to any dish to which the judges give 27 out of 30 possible points, weighted according to composition, taste, preparation and "innovation."

After the judges do their sampling, a crowd of hungry residents of Frankfurt is allowed in to order and to pay. Mr. Metz's filet of baby salmon cost $7.70, and was excellent.

"We had trouble getting the stuff through customs, though," Mr. Bosnjak said. "The Germans wanted us to buy all our ingredients here, from the Common Market. We insisted on native ingredients."

And so they flew in 3,500 pounds of perishable food.

Shielded From the Atmosphere

Aspic is perhaps the most-used ingredient, because many dishes here are cooked and then displayed—but not eaten—and would spoil if not sealed from the corrupting atmosphere, inside a jelly glaze.

It all looks good, but somehow isn't appetizing: a spiny green prickly-pear cactus made of marzipan, for instance, or even worse, a realistic looking plate of oysters on the half shell, also of marzipan, the sweet pastry made of almonds.

"The idea is to encourage and inspire young chefs to greater efforts," said a judge, Uri Guttmann of Israel, marking his ballot. It contained no space for a judgment of "taste."

The 20 national cooking teams this year were from Europe, the United States and Canada, Israel and Japan. Some countries—Cuba, East Germany and the Soviet Union—wouldn't accept invitations. Frankfurt's Mayor, Rudi Arndt, spoke for most of his fellow Burghers. "I don't need a calorie counter," he said. "If I like it, I know it has too many calories."

For the awards ceremony today, the assembled cooks doffed their white toques and aprons and got into proper Olympic-style blue blazers. The Swiss team took the highest honors, gold medals, for its dishes—Swiss lake trout, loin of pork and stuffed veal cutlet.

Canada won a second-place set of silver medals for breast of Canadian wild duck, and also its scenic landscapes carved out of maple sugar and marzipan, the German almond-flavored candy. "Most of the team members are people who left Germany," a member confided.

tax abatements under Section 421 of the real property law. Without these, builders say, it is impossible to conceive of any privately financed new multifamily construction in the city. The Bluestones' condominium project qualifies because the houses are technically multiple dwellings with at least six apartments in a building.

The typical buyer in Cloverdale Estates pays $98,500, with a $28,500 down payment and a $70,000 mortgage from the Long Island Savings Bank. But because there is a 100 percent tax exemption on the new buildings for the first two years, the monthly carrying charge to the buyer is only $570, excluding utilities. Rental income further offsets the monthly cost.

The market rent for the six-room top-floor apartment is $425, and for the five-room second floor $350. Then the owner can normally get $250 for the ground floor if he chooses to rent that out also.

The exemption declines to 80 percent after two years, 60 percent after four and so on until there is zero exemption after 10 years. It does not apply to the land.

Because suburban communities have balked at granting this incentive to new-home construction, they have left the city with a competitive advantage that is beginning to show up in the permits figures. But by no means have the incentives sufficed to maintain a high level of new construction.

They are sustaining one segment of the housing market — new low-rise multifamily construction in the outer boroughs—at a time when others have subsided. In Manhattan, the city's so-called J-51 tax incentives are doing the same through rehabilitation of older buildings.

Of the 25 houses the Bluestones are building, only five are unsold, said Eli Bluestone, even though 10 are still in construction. About three-quarters of the buyers are purchasing their first home.

In style, the house is closer to the ranch of 10 years ago than the three-story house with full basement that was built later. One enters at the mid-level, walking up a slope from the side-walk, and the lower level is down half a flight of stairs instead of a full flight.

Elsewhere on the North Shore of Queens, sales of new single-family homes have been slow, a banker said, an indication that the price has outstripped the market. The prices are lower than those in Cloverdale Estates, but there is no rent income.

HILTON GAINS AN ACCORD ON PURCHASING WALDORF

Hilton Hotels announced yesterday that it had reached an agreement with the bankrupt Penn Central Transportation Company to buy the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel for $35 million.

Hilton has been operating the hotel since 1949 under a lease with Penn Central that expires next year.

The property, which occupies the whole block between Park and Lexington Avenues and 49th and 50th Street, is the most valuable of the 24 midtown parcels that the railroad has been trying to sell since it went bankrupt in 1970.

Sale of the parcels has been held up by various legal challenges and the complexities of the bankruptcy proceedings, but the establishment last fall of the federally financed Consolidation Rail Corporation, known as Conrail, has enabled the trustees of the railroad to begin to sort out its nonrail property.

According to John Koskinen, executive vice president of Victor Palmieri & Co., which manages the railroad's nonrail properties, Penn eCntral has estimated that about 30 percent of its $1 billion real estate, other than rail assets, was in Manhattan.

It now has sold its interests in the office buildings at 230, 270 and 350 Park Avenue for $40 million and expects to close sales shortly on the Yale Club building on Vanderbilt Avenue for $1.2 million and the Commodore Hotel for $10 million.

The company agreed to pay the city 50 cents for each $1 of back taxes owed in the negotiations for the sale of the Commodore Hotel. Mr. Koskinen said that back taxes owed the city on the Waldorf-Astoria property amounted to more than $1 million. He said he expected the Penn Central trustees would accept a formula similar to that of the Commodore.

HARLEM VOTE SOUGHT BY SENATOR BUCKLEY

Campaign Follows Expressions of Coolness Toward Moynihan by Black Community Leaders

By EDITH EVANS ASBURY

SENATOR James L. Buckley spent most of yesterday in Harlem hoping to win votes in the wake of expressed coolness of some traditonally Democratic black leaders to his opponent, Daniel P. Moynihan.

The Senator, running as a Conservative Republican, was greeted enthusiastically at the Malcolm X Democratic Club, at 2382 Seventh Avenue. Its leader, Ghilton Clark, and other members said that they were backing Senator Buckley and that members not backing him were going to abstain from voting, although the club is not taking a position.

Mr. Clark is the son of Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, whose recent denunciation of Mr. Moynihan, a former United States representative to the United Nations, and announced support of Senator Buckley, gave voice to views held privately by black Democratic leaders who have abstained from supporting Mr. Moynihan.

Senator Buckley told the club's members in the crowded second-floor clubroom that it was his belief for years "that no group in America should be taken for granted."

"The role of true equality will come through equality in the economy," Senator Buckley continued. "We must weed ourselves of paternalistic programs."

Mr. Clark said he and the members had decided to support Senator Buckley after "we looked at the candidates and made a decision based on their merits."

*Floyd Patterson, former world heavy*weight champion, also announced his support of Senator Buckley yesterday. He said he was not enrolled as either a Democrat or a Republican and had supported candidates from both parties in the past.

Handshaking and Autographs

"Aside from his personal integrity," Mr. Patterson said of Senator Buckley, "he impressed me for many reasons," including his support of "legislation to effectively control the international flow of drugs."

Mr. Patterson accompanied Senator Buckley on a walk along West 139th Street, signing autographs as the Senator shook hands with passers-by.

At the office of The Amsterdam News, at 2340 Eighth Avenue, Senator Buckley was warmly greeted by the newspaper's publisher, John Procope.

Mr. Procope told the Senator he had, with the assistance of a columnist, Jimmy Hicks, written "a beautiful editorial" endorsing him and was "going to go with it," but had been overruled by his editorial board. The weekly publication, which has a circulation of 81,000 copies and is widely read in the black community of New York City, endorsed Mr. Moynihan yesterday morning. Senator Buckley had learned of the endorsement at 9 A.M. as he was setting out for the office.

The editorial, titled "A Difficult Decision," appeared below another one endorsing Jimmy Carter. The editorial stated that "on balance, we feel that Mr. Moynihan will be more receptive to the needs and aspirations of black people than Senator Buckley, adding that "by supporting Mr. Moynihan, we further support Governor Carter's candidacy."

"I wish I had come here a few days sooner," Senator Buckley said, with a cheerful smile. "I appreciate your friendship and candor."

The Rev. Gustav Schultheis, the pastor of Our Lady of Victory Roman Catholic Church, said yesterday that his omission of Senator Buckley's name from among the list of dignitaries for whom he asked blessings in an invocation at a recent ceremony at Battery Park City was inadvertent. He said he was a personal friend of Senator Buckley's and was not aware that the Senator was present until the invocation blessing was over.

Moynihan Calls Buckley Eccentric, Consistently Uncaring and Haughty

By THOMAS P. ROWAN

Daniel P. Moynihan described Senator James L. Buckley yesterday as "an eccentricity that New Yorkers can ill afford in the United States Senate."

The Democratic-Liberal candidate for the Buckley ssat said the Conservative-Republican's voting record on issues affecting this state was "so consistently uncaring, so consistently arrogant toward us, that if it did not exist it would be impossible to invent it."

With the election next Tuesday, Mr. Moynihan's latest attack on his opponent was another indication that the contest, which began quietly, has developed into a hard-fought battle with the two men slashing away at each other.

Mr. Moynihan's assessment of his opponent was contained in a speech he had prepared for a Wall Street rally for the national Democratic ticket. It was attended by 2,000 people. He had to shorten the speech when told his time was limited.

Mr. Moynihan, who favors a Federal takeover of welfare costs, said that Mr. Buckly had "simply" proposed transferring the local portion of welfare payments to the state government and that this was of no help to the state.

He also accused the Senator of voting against job and construction projects that would have helped the state and against tax cuts.

The Democrat-Liberal, who has been criticized by some black leaders but who has the support of others, was endorsed yesterday by The New York Amsterdam News, the black weekly.

The newspaper said that it was difficult for it to make a choice in the Senate race, but that "on balance, we feel that Mr. Moynihan will be more receptive to the needs and aspirations of the black people than Senator Buckley."

Lead Changes in Buffalo

A poll taken for The Buffalo Evening News indicated yesterday that Mr. Moynihan, who had been trailing Mr. Buckley in its earlier polls in Erie County and Buffalo, the county's principal city, was now ahead in both.

It gave Mr. Moynihan a lead of 39.9 percent to 38.7 percent for Mr. Buckley with the rest undecided in the county. Mr. Moynihan led 47.1 percent to 27.9 percent in Buffalo.

For a while yesterday, Mr. Moynihan appeared to be heading for a collision with the 100 Black Men, an organization of black business, political and civic leaders.

Confusion Over Invitations

This came about when J. Bruce Llewellyn, the president of the organization, said that both Mr. Moynihan and Mr. Buckley had accepted an invitation to address its monthly meeting in Harlem last night and Mr. Moynihan said he had not.

The collision was avoided when Moynihan aids said that there had been a scheduling mix-up and he had to go to a Brooklyn rally for Jimmy Carter. Mr. Moynihan made a late appearance at the meeting, speaking and answering questions for 45 minutes.

Mr. Moynihan met yesterday with the New York Board of Rabbis to discuss Israel and other issues. The organization does not endorse candidates but its president, Rabbi Judah Cahn, praised him later as "a highly intelligent, very articulate and innovative person."

He also met with Representative Shirley Chisholm, Democrat of Brooklyn, and other black officials supporting him at her office. But about half his day was spent at fund-raising events, including a dinner at which Governor Carey was the host.

Ruling on McCarthy Is Stayed for a Day To Allow an Appeal

Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, Oct. 28—Chief Judge Charles D. Breitel of the State Court of Appeals today delayed an order that had removed Eugene J. McCarthy from the state ballot as an independent candidate for the Presidency.

The one-day stay by Judge Breitel was granted, his office said, to permit an appeal from the court's order disqualifying Mr. McCarthy. The appeal is being brought before Associate Justice Thurgood Marshall of the United States Supreme Court.

Leaders of the Democratic State Committee, fearing Mr. McCarthy would take votes from Jimmy Carter, had taken the McCarthy candidacy to court.

The stay granted today will also interrupt the removal of Mr. McCarthy's name from about 25,000 voting machines in the state, a procedure that had already started yesterday as election officials began getting machines in mechanical readiness for use by voters on Tuesday.

The State Board of Elections early yesterday told Commissioners of Election in New York City and in the 57 other counties in the state to take Mr. McCarthy's name off the ballot.

"We did it by phone," a board spokesman said. "This is getting hairy. In the big cities, those machines have to be trucked to the individual election districts where the polling places are. That's more than 13,000 districts, and time is running out."

The board acted, the spokesman said, after the Court of Appeals ruled the former Senator from Minnesota off the Presidential list of candidates because of defective nominating petitions.

"After we got Judge Breitel's order," the spokesman said, "we called all the election commissioners again, telling them to put McCarthy back."

Phillip L. Marcus of Baltimore, an attorney associated with Mr. McCarthy's national campaign committee, said yesterday in a telephone interview that the committee's legal staff would petition Justice Marshall. He said that lawyers in Albany representing Mr. McCarthy had prepared the petition and that it would be filed tomorrow in Washington.

Justice Marshall is the Justice for the Second Judicial Circuit of the United States Court of Appeals, which covers New York, Connecticut and Vermont. The stay will be sought, Mr. Marcus said, so that lawyers can petition the full court for a hearing.

"There are cases where the Federal courts permitted minimal interference by the states with independent Presidential candidates," Mr. Marcus said, "but we will contend that in New York State the interference is very substantial."

The Moynihan-Buckley Contest: Breeding Gives Way to Brawling

tough-talking and the name-calling, but then took it over when that failed to get much attention as Election Day approached with Mr. Moynihan apparently still in the lead.

In short, it has been the classic posture of the underdog.

The Moynihan Strategy

In contrast, Mr. Moynihan coasted, at least in comparison to his opponent. He debated Mr. Buckley three times in four days at the start of the campaign and then ignored Mr. Buckley's demands for more until this Sunday, two days before the election.

His schedule was not nearly as intense as Mr. Buckley's, although the Democrat-Liberal contended he was spending considerable time in private fund-raising. He spent two days a week teaching at Harvard. He tried to ignore Mr. Buckley or kill him with kindness as he did in the first debate, at The New York Times.

He did not put a commercial on TV until last Thursday. He had emphasized his moderate postions in the Democratic primary in which his major competitors were three liberal Democrats. Now, he talked about his liberalism to consolidate his support in the Democratic Party.

In short, it has been the classic strategy of a front-runner.

From the start, the 53-year-old Conservative-Republican incumbent, Senator Buckley, has faced the problem of a conservative running in a state that although it has shifted rightward is still moderate to liberal. If the polls are correct, his political base has not expanded much beyond the 39 percent he garnered in the three-way Senate race in 1970.

He has tried to meet this problem by muting some of his more conservative stances and pointing up his efforts on behalf of such projects as the rebuilding of the West Side Highway and Federal aid for the proposed Battery Park City. He has also emphasized his generally acknowledged integrity. "Integrity hasn't gone out of style. . . . A conscience comes to Washington" heralds a Buckley brochure.

Wrestling With an Image

The 49-year-old Mr. Moynihan also poses a problem. Although he takes the liberal Democratic position on virtually all the major domestic issues of the day, he presents a moderate image by his emphasis on family and personal opposition to abortion, his hawkish position on Communism and defense spending and his tendency toward Roosevelt rather than McGovern liberalism.

Thus, Mr. Moynihan had the opportunity to pre-empt the middle as well as the left end of the ideological spectrum and attempt to crowd Mr. Buckley into a corner on the right. If Representative Bella S. Abzug, a clear-cut liberal, had been the Democratic nominee, Mr. Buckley would have had more maneuvering room since she is as much over to the left as he is to the right.

The Buckley-Moynihan contest has all the earmarks of a replay of 1974 when two other Catholics, Hugh L. Carey, a moderate liberal, and then Governor Malcolm Wilson, a conservative, opposed each other. Mr. Carey nudged Mr. Wilson to the right, took claim to the left and most of the middle and won in a landslide with 57 percent of the vote.

However, there are two major differences that presumably accounted for at least some of the shrinkage in the Moynihan lead and the subsequent heated words by the Democrat.

Polls, including The New York Times survey, indicate that Mr. Moynihan still has a problem with black voters, normally a sure bet for a Democrat. The Times survey showed that fully a quarter of the blacks were undecided a week ago. Another measure of black disaffection was Mrs. Abzug's capture of every black and Puerto Rican district in the city in the primary.

A Problem of Money

The black "problem" has been alleviated in recent days by a series of endorsements by some—but not all—black political leaders and the endorsement yesterday of The New York Amsterdam News.

Mr. Moynihan's second problem is money. His campaign manager, Meyer Frucher, said yesterday that about $1 million would be raised for the primary and election campaigns. This would be considerably short of the $4.5 million, much of it his brother's money, that Mr. Carey spent two years ago and also only half of the $2 million Mr. Buckley has raised.

Mr. Buckley, for example, has received $110,000 from the Republican National Committee in the last three weeks and $17,500 from the party's senatorial campaign committee. Mr. Moynihan has received $7,500 from the Democratic senatorial campaign committee and a promise of $8,000 more.

Mr. Saffir said that he was determined that win or lose Mr. Buckley would not wind up with a substantial campaign deficit. Mr. Moynihan is already in the red nearly $150,000—including a $50,000 personal loan—from the primary and that figure could grow.

Moynihan campaign workers are forgoing their salaries for the last three weeks of the campaign to save about $30,000. If the candidate loses, they will probably not be repaid. But if Mr. Moynihan is short of cash, Mr. Buckley appears to be short of votes at the moment, with little time left to make up that deficit.

New York Elections Unit Reports That It's Ready For Anything on Tuesday

The New York City Board of Elections, whose shrunken staff of 272 was flooded by 100,000 mail registration forms that arrived the first week of October, finally caught up with its paper work yesterday and prepared to conduct next Tuesday's election.

Board officials believe there is now a record of everyone who is eligible to vote, with identification cards in the mail to new voters and binders full of registration cards ready to be brought to the 1,500 polling places in the five boroughs.

But just in case, each of the city's 4,000 election districts will be supplied with 200 paper ballots to be used by people whose records somehow do not arrive at the polls and whose right to vote is challenged.

These ballots, once marked, will be sealed in envelopes that will be opened Nov. 16 if the board has been able to verify the voter's registration in its central files. Bea Dolen, the board's harried executive director, said the 200 paper ballots for each election district should be more than sufficient for any disaster, since 700 voters is considered a good turnout in the average election district.

Meanwhile, the United States Department of Justice deferred action on a request by a group of New Yorkers living overseas for a 10-day extension in the deadline for returning their absentee ballots.

The board mailed 6,000 absentee ballots overseas last week, but many of them have not arrived.

Voters who are not sure of the address of their polling place can call 267-9800 every day between now and Election Day, including the weekend. The number will be in operation from 9 A.M. until 5 P.M., and on Election Day from 6 A.M. until 9 P.M., the same hours the polls are open.

In one other development yesterday, the State Attorney General's office won an order in State Supreme Court in Queens to allow 24 longterm residents of the Pilgrim Phychiatric Center in Brentwood, L. I., to vote in Suffolk County. The County Board of Elections had refused to allow them to vote on the ground that they were not county residents. One of the 24 residents has lived at the mental hospital for the last 33 years.

2,000 at Wall St. Rally Brave a Chilly Afternoon To Back Carter Ticket

About 2,000 people attended a Wall Street rally yesterday, fidgeting in near-freezing weather as the Broadway celebrity Linda Hopkins sang a song for the Carter-Mondale ticket and chanted along with the entertainer Mitch Miller, "We want Carter!"

The lunchtime rally at Wall and Nassau Streets sought to "promote a sense of involvement" in the campaign, said William J. vanden Huevel, co-chairman of the New York State Carter campaign.

In addition to entertainment celebrities, political and business leaders stumped for the Democratic candidates. The New York Lawyers and Businessmen's Committee for CarterMondale staged the rally, according to David Jones, an organizer, "to reach out to the financial community, which isn't too sanguine about Carter's economic proposals."

The crowd was, for the most part, attentive and applauded only mildly for the speakers. But Orville Schell, the former president of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, drew cheers when he said:

"Let's turn out the party that gave us Watergate and Robert Dole one heart beat away from the Presidency."

In midtown, at the Carter-Mondale headquarters at 730 Fifth Avenue, another kind of pep rally took place ast Governor Carey and Mayor Beame announced a massive get-out-the Democratic-vote effort for Election Day. The effort will be styled after a chain letter, they said. Seven hundred prominent New Yorkers will call five Democrats they know, and those five will call five others they know, and so on.

The Mayor and the Governor urged New Yorkers not to succumb to apathy, but to vote for Jimmy Carter and end "the months and years of indifference and indirection" that they said the city had suffered under Republican Administrations.

ANTONIN RAYMOND, 88, BUILDING DESIGNER

Worked With Wright on Imperial Hotel in Tokyo — Architect of Other Structures in Japan

Antonin Raymond, an architect who was associated with the late Cass Gilbert and Frank Lloyd Wright, died Monday at St. Mary's Hospital in Langhorne, Pa. He was 88 years old and a resident of New Hope, Pa.

Mr. Raymond, who was born in Bohemia, came to the United States in 1914 after receiving training at the Polytechnic Institute in Prague.

He became a draftsman for Mr. Gilbert, who was then designing the Woolworth Building at 233 Broadway, one of the city's best-known skyscrapers.

Two years later he went to Spring Green, Wis., to study under Mr. Wright. He was drafted the next year and served with American intelligence in Switzerland in World War I.

Antonin Raymond about 1956

Aided in Hotel Design

In 1919 Mr. Raymond accompanied Mr. Wright to Japan to work with him on designing the Imperial Hotel in Tokyo. Two years later he became an ndependent achitect in Tokyo and in his stay until 1938 he designed many buildings that were distinguished by ability to blend traditional Japanese forms with Western architectural concepts.

Some of these were the Gumma Music Center in Tokyo, the Nanzan University campus in Nagoya, the American Embassy in Tokyo and, after World War II, the Reader's Digest building in Tokyo. He also designed a number of buildings in India, Ireland and the Philippines.

In World War II Mr. Raymond worked for the Army on a replica of a Japanese industrial community on the desert in Utah, and the layout for Camps Kilmer, Shanks, Upton and Fort Dix. The "Japanese workers community" was then systematically destroyed by aerial firebombing in an effort to develop a fire bomb that would be virtually unextinguishable.

One of his most recent works was the design for a $3 million remodeling in 1958 of 609 Fifth Avenue as the New York headquarters of KLM Royal Dutch Airlines. At the time he was a member of the firm of Antonin Raymond and L. L. Rado.

Mr. Raymond and his wife, the former Noemi Pernessin, were collectors of Japanese pottery and basketware. The collection has been shown in New York at the Museum of Modern Art.

Mr. Raymond became a fellow of the American Institute of Architects in 1952. Four years later its New York chapter awarded him its medal of honor. He was an honorary life fellow of the Japanese Institute of Architects and was decorated with the third class Order of the Rising Sun.

Besides his wife, he leaves a son, Claude, and six grandchildren.

A memorial service will be held at 2 P.M. on Nov. 21 at Raymond Farm in New Hope, to which he retired several years ago.

T. H. Robsjohn-Gibbings Is Dead; Designer and Interior Decorator

By NORMA SKURKA

Terence Harold Robsjohn-Gibbings, a London-born interior decorator, furniture designer and author, who had lived in Athens since 1964, died of a heart attack on Oct. 20. He underwent open-heart surgery in Dallas a year ago. His age was 71.

Mr. Robsjohn-Gibbings, who settled in the United States in 1930 and became a naturalized citizen in 1945, maintained a decorating studio, Robsjohn-Gibbings Ltd., on Madison Avenue for many years. He gained a reputation as a leading advocate of modern design.

His elegant furniture, produced for Widdicomb Furniture Company, of Grand Rapids, Mich., became a forerunner of current contemporary designs. The simple classic forms were derived from classic architecture but were largely devoid of surface decoration.

Mr. Robsjohn-Gibbings, who was known in design circles as "Gibby," was a witty and pungent critic of such institutions as the antiques business, modern art and American architecture and design. He presented his caustic and controversial, but eminently readable, views in three best-selling books, "Goodbye, Mr. Chippendale," 1944, "Mona Lisa's Mustache," 1947, and "Homes of the Brave," 1954.

In an article published in 1949, Life magazine described him as "a severe and articulate critic of nearly every style of interior decoration but his own." Mr. Robsjohn-Gibbings also designed for the Baker Furniture Company of Holland, Mich., and executed designs for fabrics and accessories.

A list of the clients whose homes he decorated included Mrs. Otto Kahn, Elizabeth Arden, John Frederics, Lily Daché, Thelma Chrysler Foy, Doris Duke and the Nieman-Marcus department store in Dallas.

In 1962, he designed the seaside villa of Aristotle Onassis as well as the Athens apartment of Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Goulandris.

His last major furniture designs were done for Eleftherios Seridis of Athens, then the largest furniture manufacturer in Greece. The collection included 19 furniture pieces based on classic Grecian designs of the fifth century B.C. These were exhibited in Salonika, Milan, Lausanne, London, Canada and in several cities in the United States.

Terence Harold Robsjohn-Gibbings

His research for the Greek-inspired furniture led to the publication of his last book, "Furniture of Classic Greece," in 1963, which Mr. Robsjohn-Gibbings produced with his longtime associate, Carlton W. Pullin.

The designer also received many industry awards including the Waters Award in 1950 and the Elsie de Wolfe Award in February 1962, which he shared with a fellow designer, Edward J. Wormley.

A lifelong collector of antiquities, the designer decorated his apartment in a brownstone on East 72d Street and, later, his home in Athens, as a simple background for the display of his classical Greek, Roman, Egyptian, Chinese and pre-Columbian art.

Mr. Robsjohn-Gibbings was born in London in 1905. He studied at the University of Liverpool and at London University, where he received a B.S. degree in architecure.

A bachelor, the designer is survived by a brother and three sisters.

James C. Maloney Dead; Veteran Pilot of Blimps For Goodyear and Navy

James C. Maloney, a veteran blimp pilot, died yesterday at his home in Akron, Ohio, after a long illness. He was 58 years old.

Mr. Maloney, who did most of his lighter-than-air flying in the Navy and for the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company, attended San Jose State College in California.

In 1945, while a Navy lieutenant, he was in charge of one of the blimps assigned to guard duty at the first United Nations Conference at San Francisco. His job was to patrol nearby coastal waters to detect Japanese submarines that might shell the conference site.

Mr. Maloney started with Goodyear shortly before World War II as a ground crew chief for blimps and returned to the company after his Navy service.

Piloted Hughes Airship

His more than 35-year career with the company was interrupted when he was hired by the late Howard R. Hughes to pilot a surplus Navy airship the industrialist had acquired to promote the motion picture "Outlaw," starring Jane Russell.

Later, he served as Goodyear's airship test pilot. From 1963 to 1967 he was chief pilot of the company's Los Angeles-based blimp, the Columbia. In that period President Eisenhower, the first team of American astronauts and Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis were among his passengers.

At the time of his death he was assistant manager of airship operations and was in charge of the company's four-ship fleet, three of which are based in this country and one in Europe.

He is survived by his wife, the former Lois Knox, three sons, David P., Charles K. and Dr. James C. Maloney Jr., and eight grandchildren.

WARREN BOWER, TEACHER; WAS HOST OF RADIO SHOW

Warren Bower, professor emeritus of English and a former assistant dean of New York University's School of Continuing Education, died Tuesday at St. Vincent's Hospital. He was 78 years old and lived at the Salmagundi Club, at 45 Fifth Avenue.

Mr. Bower was well known as the host a WNYC radio program, "The Reader's Almanac," which offered interviews with authors between 1938 and 1967. In 1962 he was given the Peabody Award for the show, which reflected his deep interest in books and authors.

He was born in Elkhart, Ind., and graduated from Hillsdale College in 1920. He earned his master's degree from the University of Michigan in 1923.

He was the author of "The College Writer," "New Directions' and 'How to Write for Pleasure and Profit."

He is survived by his wife, Lesley.

Candace Mossler to Be Buried In Arlington National Cemetery

MIAMI BEACH, Oct. 28 (AP)—Candace Mossler, who officials say apparently suffocated in a heavily sedated sleep, will be buried tomorrow in Arlington National Cemetery beside the wealthy husband she was acquitted of slaying.

Mrs. Mossler, whose murder trial in Miami drew wide attention in 1966, died Tuesday in a local hotel. She was believed to be 62, but had said she was seven years younger.

Funeral services for Mrs. Mossler were held here today. Among the mourners was Melvin Powers, her nephew and an acquitted codefendant in the murder trial.

Officials at Arlington National Cemetery confirmed that Mrs. Mossler would be buried next to Jacques Mossler, her second husband and a World War I veteran.

Meanwhile, the Dade County medical examiner, Dr. Joseph Davis, said his autopsy showed a high level of sedatives in Mrs. Mossler's body. It was not a lethal dose, he said, but it probably caused her to suffocate after rolling over onto her face.

Ruby Schut, then Ruby Bates, recanting her testimony during retrial in Decatur, Ala., in 1933.

Ruby Schut, 63, Is Dead; Said She Was Involved In 'Scottsboro Boys' Case

YAKIMA, Wash., Oct. 28 (UPI)—Ruby Schut, who said she was one of two women who made a rape charge in 1931 against the nine "Scottsboro Boys" in Alabama, is dead. She was 63 years old. She died of natural causes yesterday.

Six months ago she filed a $2.5 million suit against NBC, accusing the network of libel, slander and breach of privacy for its telecast of a program called "Judge Horton and the Scottsboro Boys."

Mrs. Schut said that she was born Ruby Bates in Huntsville, Ala., and had birth records, a Social Security number and fingerprints to prove her identity.

An epilogue to the television broadcast said that the Ruby Bates involved in the trial died in 1961. Newspapers in Scottsboro were unable to find any records of the death, but the publisher of The Scottsboro Daily Sentinel said it was "generally accepted" that Miss Bates was dead.

Mrs. Schut's Alabama attorney, Arthur Haines Jr., said that the suit would not be affected by the woman's death or that of her husband, Elmer Schut, a week earlier. Any proceeds from the suit will go to their estate, he added.

Mrs. Schut said that as Ruby Bates she and another woman accused nine black youths of raping them aboard a freight train in Alabama.

The trial of the Scottsboro Nine became one of the most controversial in the South. Eight of the nine youths, ranging in age from 12 to 19, were sentenced to death in the electric chair. Two years later, Ruby Bates recanted her testimony and said no rape had occurred.

Appeals, retrials and out-of-court developments continued for 15 years before the last of the defendants was freed on parole.

Just two days before Mrs. Schut's death, Clarence Norris, 64, a resident of New York City and the last of the nine defendants known to be still alive, received a full pardon from Alabama.

JERRY BUSH

LINCOLN, Neb., Oct. 28 (UPI) — Jerry Bush, a former basketball star at St. John's and coach at the University of Nebraska, died of an apparent heart attack yesterday. He was 62 years old.

Mr. Bush coached at Nebraska for nine years ending in 1963. His teams won 81 games and lost 127. Before that, he coached at Toledo, where his teams won 120 and lost 59.

ALFRED WILLOUGHBY; CITIZEN GROUP HEAD

National Director of the National Municipal League Dies

Alfred Willoughby, who retired in 1968 as executive director of the National Municipal League, a nonpartisan citizen group seeking better government, died in Fairview Hospital, Great Barrington, Mass., Wednesday after a long illness. He was 77 years old.

Alfred Willoughby

Mr. Willoughby, who lived in Hillsdale, N. Y., joined the league, with headquarters here at 47 East 68th Street, in 1937 and in 1940 became its executive director and editor of its monthly magazine, The National Civic Review.

During his directorship, the league's membership quadrupled, and its program was greatly expanded. Richard S. Childs, honorary chairman and past president of the league, paid tribute to Mr. Willoughby's "sheer doggedness" in the Depression years, when he "began tapping business and obtaining corporate gifts in what became a gallant adventure."

In that period, Mr. Childs said, it was not the custom to ask businesses to give to civic causes.

In his years with the league, Mr. Willoughby served on the board of the Public Administration Service and was a member of the American Committee for International Municipal Cooperation, the Governmental Research Association and the American Political Science Association.

Joseph M. Schnee at 47; Bloomingdale's Executive In Charge of Soft Goods

Joseph E. Schnee, executive vice president of Bloomingdale's, died Wednesday at his Hartsdale, N. Y., home after a long illness. He was 47 years old.

Mr. Schnee, a graduate of Syracuse University, joined the department store's executive training squad in 1953 and was named division merchandising manager for men's and boys' apparel in 1967.

Two years later he was promoted to vice president for fashion accessories, and in 1974 he was appointed a senior vice president and general merchandising manager for menswear and home furnishings.

In 1975 he was named executive vice president and general merchandising manager for all soft-goods divisions.

He was active in raising funds for the United Jewish Appeal and the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies. Two years ago he was honored at a dinner sponsored by the New York Association for the Blind for building support ffor the Lighthouse in the menswear industry.

Mr. Schnee, who was an Army first lieutenant during the Korean War, leaves his wife, the former Carolyn F. Brumer; two daughters, Elizabeth and Emily; a brother, Lawrence, and his mother, Jean Schnee.

Funeral services will be held at 1 P.M. today at Riverside Memorial Chapel, Amsterdam Avenue and 76th Street.

MARGARET E. MORRIS

Margaret Edwards Morris, widow of Dudley H. Morris, an artist and former chairman of the art department of the Lawrenceville (N.J.) School, died Wednesday in Princeton (N.J.) Hospital. She was 65 years old and lived in Princeton.

She is survived by two sons, Dudley and Alexander; three sisters, two brothers and four grandchildren.

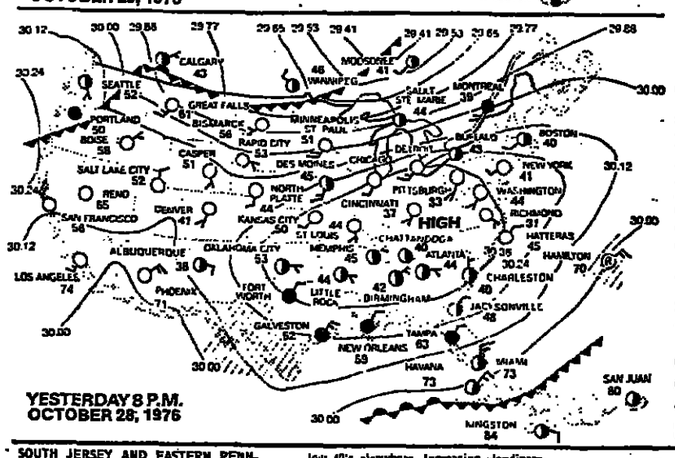
TODAY'S FORECAST 8 P.M. OCTOBER 29, 1976



YESTERDAY 8 P.M. OCTOBER 28, 1976

Cold front: a boundary between cold air and warmer air, under which the colder air pushes like a wedge, usually south and east.

Warm front: a boundary between warm air and a retreating wedge of colder air over which the warm air is forced as it advances, usually north and east.

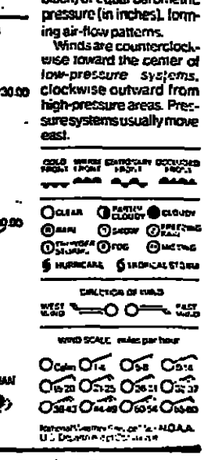
Occluded front: a line along which warm air was lifted by opposing wedges of cold air, often causing precipitation.

Shaded areas indicate precipitation.

Dash lines show forecast afternoon maximum temperatures.

Isobars are lines (solid black) of equal barometric pressure (in inches), forming air-flow patterns.

Winds are counterclockwise toward the center of low-pressure systems, clockwise outward from high-pressure areas. Pressure systems usually move east.



SOUTH JERSEY AND EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA—Sunny today, high from the upper 40's inland to the mid to upper 50's along the coast; fair tonight, low from the upper 20's inland to the 30's along the coast. Increasing cloudiness and milder tomorrow.

INTERIOR EASTERN NEW YORK AND VERMONT—Becoming mostly sunny today, high from the 40's north to the 50's south; clear to partly cloudy tonight, low from the mid-20's north to the mid-30's south. Increasing cloudiness, continued cool with chance of showers tomorrow.

CONNECTICUT, RHODE ISLAND AND MASSACHUSETTS—Mostly sunny today, high in the 50's; fair tonight, low from the 20's in the Berkshires to the 30's to low 40's elsewhere. Increasing cloudiness, continued cool tomorrow.

NEW HAMPSHIRE AND MAINE—Mostly sunny today, high from near 40 north to around 50 south; clear tonight, low in the 20's. Increasing cloudiness, continued cool tomorrow.

Extended Forecast

(Sunday through Tuesday)

METROPOLITAN NEW YORK, LONG ISLAND AND NORTH JERSEY—Chance of rain Sunday; fair Monday and Tuesday. Daytime highs will average in the 50's, while overnight lows average in the 40's.

What seems to be Gracie Mansion's first "luncheon and midi dansant" is scheduled for Nov. 10 in honor of the Bee Gees. The pop-rock group, formed by the Brothers Gibb (Barry, Robin and Maurice), has promised to give the Police Athletic League the net proceeds of its Dec. 2 concert at Madison Square Garden. Commissioner Arline Wolfe of the city's public affairs department said the description of the event "has never been used before, to my knowledge." More than 150 invitations have been issued to the "elaborate buffet" in a tent overlooking the East River, with dancing to a band yet to be announced. The Gibbs brothers, born in England like Mayor Beame, grew up in Brisbane, Australia, and began performing in childhood.

Harding F. Bancroft has joined his wife, Jane Northrop Bancroft, on the board of the New York Botanical Garden, where she has served since 1969. Mr. Bancroft will be chairman of the board's committee on operations of the Botanical Garden's 2,000-acre Cary Arboretum at Millbrook, N.Y., where the Bancrofts live. Mr. Bancroft retired this year as vice chairman of The New York Times and is a former member of the United States delegation to the United Nations.

The two Italian archeologists who discovered a Syrian city at least 4,300 years old have arrived here to discuss their findings with American scholars. Giovanni Pettinato and Paolo Matthiae, both of the University of Rome, showed their slides Wednesday for the first time at a New York University seminar co-sponsored by the American Schools of Oriental Research. The audience included scholars from Yale, Columbia and Yeshiva Universities, the Jewish and Union Theological Seminaries and the Metropolitan and Brooklyn Museums. The Italians' coming two-week tour is financed by the National Endowment for the Humanities.

Harry N. Abrams, whose glossily colorful books on art and artists are seen on the best coffee tables as well as in more scholarly haunts, has stepped down as board chairman and chief executive of his publishing company. Mr. Abrams, aged 71, will remain on the board of the company, a subsidiary of the Times Mirror Company since 1966. Brought here from London at the age of eight, Mr. Abrams became art director of the Book of the Month Club in 1936. He left in 1949 to put out the first of his books—on Van Gogh, El Greco and Renoir—and for many years has issued about 40 annually. The original New York staff of three has grown to 100, with printing branches in Amsterdam and Tokyo. As a personal collector, Mr. Abrams has specialized in American realist, pop and op art. Succeeding him as head of Harry N. Abrams Inc. is Andrew Stewart, formerly executive vice president.

Celebrating Chaim Gross's 55-year devotion to its art school, the Educational Alliance honored the sculptor Wednesday night with a dinner for 300 guests. There was an exhibit of lithographs, watercolors and sculpture, including two panels from the current "Artist-Immigrants of America, 1876-1976" show at the Hirschhorn Museum in Washington, and a sort of "this is your life" evocation through 50 photographs and a flood of memory-filled anecdotes about the artist, aged 72. As a 17-year-old immigrant, Mr. Gross took Yiddish-language evening classes at Felicia Montealegre, a Chilean-born actress, has announced that she and her husband, Leonard Bernstein, the conductor, have begun a trial separation but "hope to reconcile." The couple married in 1951 and have two daughters and a son, aged from 14 to 23. Associates of the Bernsteins said yesterday that the decision had evidently been made since Mr. Bernstein's Oct. 12 departure for Europe with the New York Philharmonic. Said one colleague, "I personally took him to the airport from the Dakota," the Central Park West apartment house where the Bernsteins live. According to another, "there was talk of his coming back" for last week's opening of "Poor Murderer," in which Miss Montealegre has a role.

Regents Urge New York to Widen Tuition Help at the City University

By LEONARD BUDER
Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, Oct. 28—The New York State Board of Regents urged New York City today to provide free undergraduate tuition to give tuition assistance to City University students whose families had gross annual incomes of $14,000 or less.

The proposal, which would involve the extension of current tuition-assistance programs for low-income students, was advanced as a means of enabling the city to retain middle-class families who might otherwise move, according to Willard A. Genrich of Buffalo, chairman of the Regents Committee on Higher and Professional Education.

But the prospects for the city's adoption of the proposal are bleak. Last spring, the city administration announced its intention to end its support of the university's nine senior colleges by July 1978, and it called on the state to assume the full cost of these institutions.

In New York City, a university spokesman said that about 89,000 of the university's estimated full-time undergraduate enrollment of 117,411 students came from families with gross incomes of $15,000 or less. The university had no figures for the $14,000-and-under income category.

Effect of the Proposal

Officials of the State Education Department emphasized that the Regents had not advocated even a partial return to the City University's recently abandoned free-tuition policy. But some of the Regents said privately that the effect of extending the tuition-assistance program would be to give free tuition to the students affected.

The proposal was included in the final version of the Regents' "Statewide Plan for the Development of Postsecondary Education," a document that the law requires them to submit every four years. The final plan, which the Regents formally adopted at a public meeting today, contained some changes made as the result of public hearings held on the tentative plan announced last August. The plan will now be transmitted to the Governor and the Legislature.

One of the revisions calls upon New York City "to fully fund a tuition-aid program for full-time undergraduate C.U.N.Y. students from families with gross incomes of $14,000 or less."

The university's traditional free-tuition policy was abandoned, effective this fall, as the price of obtaining emergency state aid for the financially hard-pressed municipal institution. The City University's undergraduate tuition charges, now in line with those of the State University, range from $750 to $900 a year.

The revised plan, as did the earlier version, called for the continuation of the City University as an independent institution. There has been some talk in recent months of a possible merger of the City and State Universities, and the matter is among the issues under consideration by a special commission appointed by Governor Carey.

The final plan also proposed a substantial increase in the state share of the operating budgets of the City University's senior colleges by 1979-80. Under the plan, the state's share would rise to 80 percent, while New York City's share, now 50 percent, would be reduced to 20 percent.

In the tentative plan, the Regents recommended that graduate tuition fees at the State and City Universities be raised to 50 percent of "the standard cost of education." In the plan adopted, the Regents changed this figure to 40 percent.

The Regents kept the proposal of the original plan that undergraduate tuition at public institutions be pegged at one-third of the standard cost, which the Regents said, "approximates current tuition levels."

The Regents also endorsed the concept of tenure for faculty members at colleges and universities, but recommended that colleges and universities consider retaining some faculty members on renewable five-year contracts.

Jersey's Public Advocate Says He May Sue Sludge Dumpers

TOMS RIVER, N. J., Oct. 28 (AP)—State Public Advocate Stanley C. Van Ness has agreed to represent shore interests in a suit against communities and industries whose ocean waste-dumping was responsible for an algae bloom that caused a massive fish kill off the Jersey coast last summer.

Mr. Van Ness, who met with State Senator John F. Russo, Democrat of Toms River, and Freeholder Robert A. Gasser of Ocean County yesterday, said he would begin an immediate investigation of the waste disposal. He said his aim was to find an "interim alleviation" of the problem until all ocean dumping was banned in 1981.

"If the inquiry indicates litigation is necessary, then we will go to court to protect those state residents who use the beaches or depend on recreational or fishing industries for their livelihood," Mr. Van Ness said.

Communities in New Jersey, New York and Pennsylvania dump sludge less than 15 miles off Sandy Hook and Cape May.

SCHOOL BOARD LOSES ARBITRATION ON PACT

It Is Told to Pay Paraprofessionals for Training Despite Program's Removal From City's Budget

By DAMON STETSON

An arbitrator ruled yesterday that the Board of Education must live up to its contractual commitments for paraprofessional training despite New York's elimination of funds for the program.

"The sanctity of valid contracts cannot be repudiated by unilateral, arbitrary actions, even of government officials—perhaps especially by government officials—without the force of law to support their stand," Milton Friedman, the arbitrator, said in his decision.

The case arose as a result of the board's refusal to pay stipends of $80 to $85 a week to 1,700 paraprofessionals, represented by the United Federation of Teachers, who participated in a summer training program under terms of the union contract. The total cost would have been about $800,000, but the board said it was unable to make the payments because the city had stricken from the budget the line for training paraprofessionals, who assist teachers in the classroom.

Mr. Friedman said, however, that the board had an "absolute obligation" for a fixed amount that was embodied in its contract with the teachers' union. He added that the board had no alternative but to do all that was possible to utilize whatever discretionary funds available to pay for the training.

"The city may not use the stratagem of its budget authority to block the board from meeting contractual commitments, as it did in this case," Mr. Friedman said.

In commenting on the ruling, Albert Shanker, president of the teachers' union, said that the decision made clear that "neither the city nor the board may unilaterally and arbitrarily do away with contractual items." The ruling, he said, is "particularly significant at a time when some city and state officials think labor contractual items." The ruling, he said,

Mr. Shanker also said that the decision would have a "broad impact" on enforcement of existing agreements between the U.F.T. and the board covering teachers and seven other groups represented by the union. Other contract provisions in dispute, a spokesman for the union said, relate to class size and teacher sabbaticals.

A spokesman for the Board of Education said that the decision was binding, but that the final cost was expected to be about half of the original estimate of $800,000, since many paraprofessionals expected to take part in the training program did not do so because of the board's notice to the union last June that the project had been cut from the budget.

Troubled Children Given Hope by a Rare Tea

Street, where she taught for nine years until it was closed this fall, she was assigned a class that "had already gone beserk when I got them."

"Their teacher had just walked out on them one day," she says.

"Fifteen young men walked out of the class the first day," she recalls. "Another child urinated in the closet. Everybody had said they were crazy and they believed it. By Halloween, though, they were a different class.

"Last year's class left me emotionally drained. I didn't receive very much support from the school and I just didn't feel that I could do it again.

"I would be sitting at dinner thinking of ideas to get the children working. I can't divorce myself at 3 o'clock. But I think once I'm able to divorce myself, what kind of a teacher will I be?"

In winter Mrs. Stevens will provide warm clothing for those who need it and a "warm, receptive place for them at school."

Children come to her about the turmoil in their homes.

"I tell them that I know its hard but they must do their work," she says. "Nobody can take that learning away from them. I do my best for the child. I can't change his homelife."

She remembers one girl "who had me in tears when she told me about how afraid she was to go home at night."

"She had been raped when she went home to fix her lunch," Mrs. Stevens says," and one of her teachers had announced it to the class to punish her.

"I found out that this girl was incredibly talented and encouraged her to join the poetry club. She writes brilliant poems now."

Turning Class Around

So she begins at the beginning with her students in a process she calls "turning the class around." She must teach them to read and spends months helping them to cope with their emotional and discipline problems.

She speaks to them gently but she is firm. She rarely raises her voice. She usually addresses them as "Miss and Mr."

She shakes a bunch of keys and the little tinkling sound is supposed to summon them to attention. She repeats this many times. She will not be provoked and she will not strike them.

"These children," she says, "must learn to respond to something else. And eventually they will trust me enough to find something in themselves to respond to. This is the only will get a sense of themselv

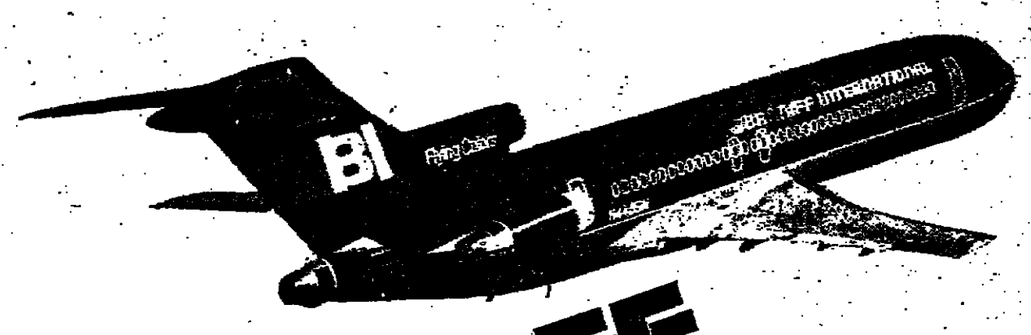
Police in Japan Arrest 2,489 And $12 Million Worth of Drugs

TOKYO, Oct. 28 (Reuters)—The Japanese police said today that 2,489 people had been arrested and $12 million worth of drugs seized in a coordinated nationwide raid against homes and offices.

Those detained were suspected of coercion, gambling, violation of laws on firearms and weapon control and various other crimes, the police said.

About 225 firearms, including 30 pistols, were seized. Also confiscated were 4,360 items, including wooden swords and pornographic magazines intended for illegal sales.



TAKE OFF WITH FLYING COLORS

Robert Louis Stevenson said: "To travel hopefully is a better thing than to arrive." He was talking about the start-of-something-new feeling that comes when a great plane lifts you off the ground and soars into the sky.

We think you will have that feeling when you—take off with Flying Colors!

It means the happy anticipation of a successful business meeting, a family reunion, a long-awaited visit with a friend, or a well-earned vacation.

It means you travel relaxed, with a sense of well-being.

That's why you may never want to take off any other way.

THE LITTLE DEVILS will be partying and parading this weekend, accompanied by their friends the little monsters, the fairy princesses, the pirates, the skeletons, the space commanders, the gypsies, the wicked witches and the six-million-dollar men.

And, like countless children before them, they will chant something like this as they roam the streets:

Tricks or treats, money or eats,
Or we'll soap your windows white as sheets.

The occasion, of course, is Halloween, or All Hallows Eve. And since the big night falls on a Sunday this year, the area's hobgoblins have stretched the celebration to three days and nights, with the first official events beginning today.

The Halloween kickoff is at 12:30 P.M. today, when 40 children from the United Nations International School will gather on the steps of City Hall to accept Mayor Beame's proclamation dedicating Oct. 31 to UNICEF.

The children from foreign lands will be wearing native costumes, while American children will be in Halloween costumes. The occasion marks the 26th year that thousands of New York youngsters will collect coins for UNICEF on Halloween. The kids, of course, get to keep any candy they get.

For some reason, the weekend's biggest Halloween events will take place in or near Greenwich Village, which is not to imply that Village residents are spooky or weird or anything like that.

The biggest spectacle there will be the third annual Greenwich Village Halloween parade, which starts at 5:30 P.M. on Sunday in the courtyard of Westbeth, the artists' housing community at 155 Bank Street, and winds up in Washington Square Park, for a 30-minute grand

And for Hobnobbing With the Candidates

By MAURICE CARROLL

IT'S IMPROBABLE, no doubt, but if you should be at the MacArthur Field airport in Islip, L.I., at 8 o'clock this morning, you can see Senator James L. Buckley talk with some news reporters.

His private plane will fly off for White Plains, Albany, Syracuse, Rochester, Buffalo and Binghamton at 8:40, and that will give you barely enough time to hurry to a television set to watch his opponent, Daniel P. Moynihan, sometime around 8:45 on the "AM New York" show over WABC.

And so on.

For those who might wish to mingle weekend amusement with a sense of civic duty, the Halloween weekend will provide ample opportunity for politician-watching in the New York, New Jersey and Connecticut metropolitan area.

DANCE IN QUEENS

Simone Forti, who has danced almost everywhere else in the world, will dance tonight in Queens at P.S. 1 or, as it is also called Project Studio One. This is the experimental art center of the Institute for Art and Urban Resources, and Miss Forti will present a dance concert there at 9 P.M. It will be repeated tomorrow and Sunday at the same time. The concerts will feature a large group work that is supposed to be based on animal movement, a solo entitled "Fan Dance," and a quartet. P.S. 1 is at 21-01 46th Road in Long Island City. To get there, take the Flushing Line No. 7 train to the Hunter's Point Station, or the E or F train to the 23d Street-Ely Avenue station. If you drive, go through the Midtown Tunnel to Queens and then get off at the first exit, 21st Street and Van Alst. P.S. 1 is three blocks away. For information, call 233-1096.

GHOST TRAINS IN BRONX

If you cannot get enough of steam locomotives, trolleys and old elevated lines, then you might want to go to the Bronx tonight and watch three hours of movies about them. The movies have been put together by Roger Arcara, a Bronx transportation expert and historian, and among other things they show the old Putnam Division of the New York Central, the old BMT in Brooklyn and the old trolley cars that once crossed the Brooklyn Bridge. Mr. Arcara calls his presentation "Railway Nostalgia Movie Night," and he is putting it on at the Y.M.C.A. at 2244 Westchester Avenue, which is near Castle Hill Avenue, at 8 P.M. Tickets are $3. You get there by taking the Lexington Avenue local (the No. 6—Pelham Bay Park line) to Castle Hill Avenue, or a No. 42 bus (Westchester Avenue line) to Westchester Avenue, or by driving on the Cross Bronx Expressway or Bruckner Expressway to Castle Hill Avenue, *and going north to Westchester Ave*nue. For information, call TY 2-8976.

NEW ACT IN TOWN

Night life in New York is supposed to be on the wane, but it is not dead yet, and tonight a new act is coming into Galaxy 21, 256 West 23d Street. The act is Kenny Brawner & Raw Sugar, a rhythm and blues sextet. Show times are 11 P.M. and 1 and 3 A.M. In between, customers are expected to dance, mostly to the salsa and hustle, or while away their time in the restaurant, bar or lounge at Galaxy 21. The customers can also play a "Pong" game on one of the table consoles. Mr. Brawner sings and plays the piano. Admission: $8. Telephone: 691-5585.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS THE WORD

There are chrysanthemums in Brooklyn and chrysanthemums in the Bronx, and Saturday may be a nice day to see them. The Brooklyn Botanic Garden is holding its annual mums show in the conservatory showroom, and the New York Botanical Garden, while it is not having a special show, nonetheless has mums all over the grounds. In Brooklyn, there are thousands of flowers displayed in geometric patterns, with 42 varieties of the big football-game mums. In the Bronx, 30 varieties are displayed, most of them in beds bordered by evergreen trees. The Brooklyn Botanic Garden is at 100 Washington Avenue, and on Saturday and Sunday admission is 10 cents. Take the IRT Seventh Avenue Express to Eastern Parkway to get there. For information, call 622-4433. The New York Botanical Garden is at 200th Street and Southern Boulevard in the Bronx, and admission is free. Take the ConRail Harlem line to the Botanical Garden station, or the IND D train to Bedford Park Boulevard, or the IRT No. 4 train to Bedford Park Boulevard and Jerome Avenue. By car, take the Bronx River Parkway to Fordham Road South, or the Mosholu Parkway to Southern Boulevard. Information: 220-8700.

HORSES IN SOMERSET

There is a social season in Somerset County in New Jersey, and much of it centers on the horse. On Saturday, the season reaches its height with the 56th running of the steeplechase races

Rex Harrison Is Caesar Again—This Time a Shavian One

REX HARRISON will return to Broadway next February, starring with Elizabeth Ashley in Shaw's "Caesar and Cleopatra." It will be directed by Noel Willman, and produced by Elliott Martin and Gladys Rackmil, and before it comes here it will play the Kennedy Center in Washington. Mr. Martin had thought he would be producing "Monsieur Perrichon's Travels" on Broadway with Mr. Harrison this fall, but after seeing it done at the Chichester Festival in England last summer he decided against it. Subsequently, Mr. Martin, who produced Pirandello's "Henry IV" with Mr. Harrison a few years ago, suggested "Caesar and Cleopatra." Mr. Harrison said he had always wanted to do it, but never had. (He did play Caesar in the movie "Cleopatra" with Elizabeth Taylor, but that was something else.) Mr. Martin, in turn, said it would be Mr. Harrison's greatest role since Henry Higgins. Then the deal was made.

The production will open at the Kennedy Center on Jan. 7, and arrive here about the first week in February. Mr. Harrison was last here two seasons ago in Terence Rattigan's "In Praise of Love," while Miss Ashley was here last season in "Legend." Neither production did well. Mr. Willman, meanwhile, was last here when he directed Katharine Hepburn in "A Matter of Gravity." That did somewhat better.

Colleen Dewhurst will star in "An Almost Perfect Person" when it opens at the Arlington Park Theater in Chicago on Nov. 19. Then, if her commitments allow her to, she will star in it when it opens in New York some six weeks later. "An Almost Perfect Person" is about a woman on the West Side who loses an election, and it is written by Judith Ross. It is being produced by Burry Fredrik. The other interesting thing about it is that it is being directed by Zoe Caldwell. Miss Caldwell is a distinguished actress, and generally considered one of our best. The question, therefore, is why does she want to direct? Herein we catch Miss Caldwell at lunch, trying to find an answer:

"I could say there's no limit to my hubris—and I will say it before anyone else does. Besides that, I have ideas about what a good director does for actors. The good ones—the best of all being Harold Clurman—do their homework. They also usually have a good relationship with the playwright, whether he's dead or alive. . . ."

"Preferably dead," a wiseacre at the luncheon table said.

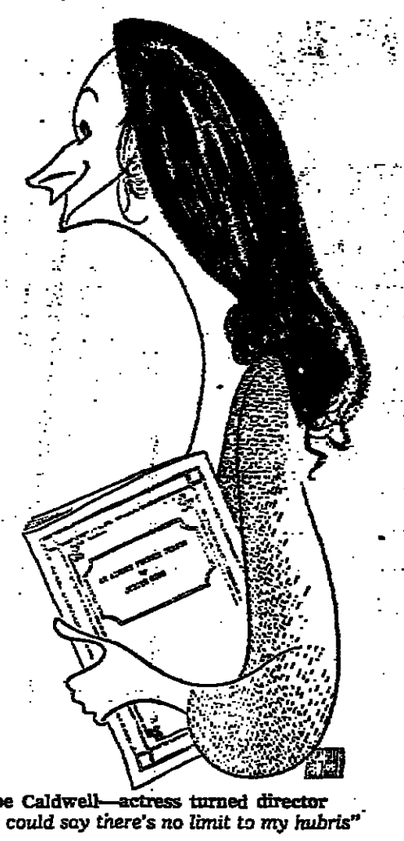
"And a good director seems to create a climate of conditions so that actors can reach into their bag and do their best work. Now, my great lesson in humility will be that I'll do all those things and . . ."

Miss Caldwell paused.



Zoe Caldwell—actress turned director
"I could say there's no limit to my hubris"

". . . it won't work," she said.

Miss Caldwell said that she had become a professional in the theater at the age of 9, that she had played in revues in Australia and vaudeville in Canada, and in Shaw, Shakespeare, Congreve, Brecht and Chekhov practically everywhere else. Until she met and married Robert Whitehead, she said, she had taken every part that came along. Then she took fewer parts, and after the birth of her twins—Sam and Charlie—she took even fewer.

"I'm 42 years old now," she said.

"But you were born Sept. 14, 1933," someone else said.

"My God, I think you're right. I'm 43," Miss Caldwell said. "I've been wrong about my age all year."

Then Miss Caldwell said that, as part of her homework for directing "An Almost Perfect Woman," she had gone both to Democratic and Republican fund-raising rallies. She also said she had been meeting with Miss Ross, the author, for six months.

"And isn't it exciting to have Colleen," she said: "Charming! Charming! The character in the play is a real woman, and the best of all the all-around women I know is Colleen."

Miss Caldwell clapped her hands, stamped her feet, and looked happy. Someone asked her then if she might star in the play if Miss Dewhurst couldn't make it to New York.

"I'd have to play it as a character. Remember that I'm not an American," she said. "But if I could play it better than Colleen I'd have done it in the first place."

"The Dream," which Richard Lortz adapted Lucy Freeman's novel, will open on Broadwa 21 at a Shubert theater, the particular one undecided on. First, however, "The Dream," is a psychiatric whodunit about a murder, wi the Locust Street Theater in Philadelphia. Then play the Colonial Theater in Boston. Edwin Sh the director, and Joel Schenker is the producer. while, Mr. Schenker, when he is not working o Dream," will be working on a new play by Elder 3d. It is about Ira Aldridge, the great actor who made a name for himself in Europ than 100 years ago. Mr. Schenker wants to play on Broadway next season.

Gilbert Moses will direct the production, and Mr. Schenker are now looking for a st dridge, who was born in New York in 1805, England at the age of 17 to work in the theat eventually traveled as far as Russia. Some historians think he was the greatest Othello

D'Jamin Bartlett, although she was alre mother of two, made her professional debut few years ago in "Godspell." Then she got a "A Little Night Music," where she would n stop the show in the second act with the son Miller's Son." Then she went to Buffalo, wh would regularly stop a revue with "Over th bow." The revue, however, died. Now Miss is at the Village Gate in "2 by 5," where she s show with "Maybe This Time" from "Cabare Bartlett says there is nothing to it. "It's the she says. "The lyrics are so good all you ha is croak it."

The critics were kind, but hardly ecstati "Pippin" opened, and the assumption was would be around for a while, but that it w go on forever. "Pippin" had the staging of B and the dancing of Ben Vereen, but its a tributes were thought of as minimal. This however, "Pippin" passed its fourth annive the Imperial Theater, where, so far, it ha to two million people. Mr. Vereen, meanw long since left the show and been replaced l ern J. Calloway. Mr. Calloway is a man with outlook, eternally optimistic, who has not of work since he graduated from the Hig of Performing Arts 10 years ago. In part, he is because he is "a calm-looking black."

"I would like to be a great actor, origin parts, do great theater. But my choices are Mr. Calloway said. He was in his dressi musing over a chessboard. "Black actors do sent black people," he sad. "Black actors, anyway, are ex-football players. They're bols, or else they're guys jitterbugging street."

Mr. Calloway went on to name some players. He said they were terrible actors.

"Ben Vereen," he said, "Ben leaves 'Pi getting great reviews, and he can't find else he's second on the bill at Westbury. Cu —if a white performer got reviews as s as she did every producer would want does a black have to do to prove he's a star

Laurence Luckinbill in "Poor Murderer"
A test case for Broadway?

Mr. Papp who, for a nonprofit maker, happens to have the shrewdest commercial nose in the business, did not move it to Broadway, or at least has not done so at present. This could be simply because of the subject matter —the erratic escalation of violence, the sudden, startling void of death, when a metaphorical parachute fails to open and a man falls through a metaphorical sky. Could Broadway take that now? Perhaps. Perhaps not.

A Medium for Massaging

Broadway is an entertainment theater, where people go to have their minds massaged rather than disturbed. At its best, it does that massaging most expertly, yet Broadway nowadays rarely stimulates. Even what stimulation it has, comes from the outside—plays from the resident theaters across the country, or from the subsidized theaters of Great Britain

Yet once in a while, Broadway, the eternal optimist as well as the eternal invalid, will try something different. This is what it is doing with "Poor Murderer" at the Ethel Barrymore Theater. It is a gorgeous, unexpected play, certainly complex, but just as certainly rewarding.

"Poor Murderer" is by the Czech playwright Pavel Kohout who, like his contemporary Vaclav Havel, is out of favor with the present Czech regime. His play is a complex and dazzling investigation of illusion and reality, using both the metaphor and fact of the actor —the hero is an actor played by Lawrence Luckinbill who plays Hamlet and thinks he has actually killed Polonius—and madness itself.

It is the kind of play you expect to see in New York but not perhaps on Broadway. Or, if it is to be seen on Broadway — because, at a mockingly comic level, Tom Stoppard's "Travesties" last season was equally as complex and as invigorating—it is normally seen as a pre-tested, star-studded British import. No, "Poor Murderer" is the kind of play one would expect Joseph Papp, Theodore Mann, Robert Kalfin or one of our other nonprofit, cultural entrepreneurs to have staged.

The importance of "Poor Murderer," and the reason why I urge you to put it on your weekend shopping list, is that it is a test case, one that might well determine whether Broadway can occasionally be daring or must forever play it safe, trading on known quantities and qualities and the past successes of other theaters — either off Broadway, in London or across the country. Can Broadway dare on its own? "Poor Murderer" is going to help to provide the answer. Is it too rich for the Broadway public? It certainly makes demands, and it is not yet fashionable. Why not be the first on your block to see it?

The wildest night spot in the Bronx is only open during the day.
It's called the World of Darkness and you'll see some exotic goings-on there. Fruit bats hanging by their toes, night monkeys swinging from the ceiling, porcupines bristling with excitement. And many more creatures who play in the dark and sleep in the light.
Admission to the Zoo from Friday through Monday is $1 for adults and 50¢ for children. It's open every day and it's easy to get there.
To reach the Zoo by car from Long Island, Westchester County, Rockland County, Connecticut or New Jersey, take Bronx River Parkway and exit at "Bronx Zoo" to the Zoo's parking field.
Convenient subway and express bus service from Manhattan, as well as bus service from Queens and in the Bronx is available. For more information, call (212) 220-5100.

BRAVO!

Come see and hear the three-opera opera—Il Trittico. From the murderous lust and ironic twists of Il Tabarro to the exquisite pathos of Suor Angelica and the marvelous madcap of Gianni Schicchi, here are three magnificent acts of creation from Puccini. The remaining tickets for the performances listed below are at The Met Box Office now. Come in or call 580-9830 for a night of civilization you'll never forget.

...d count, Miss Bewley ...honestly say I have ...sed of being boring." ...arts ...disagree? Most dancego-...Miss Bewley from her ...n the Ballet Russe de ...Monte Carlo, appeared in a musical that lasted three days and joined the City Ballet at 17.

"I didn't begin to see that companies were not for me until I had gone through three companies," she said. "There are times when people try to control you, and now I know I'll never do what I don't want to do. Artistic fulfillment, that's what it's all about. That's why I'm doing a solo concert. I want to enjoy it more than anyone else. I deserve it."

"I am doing a modern piece to music by Leon Kirchner," she said. "If the word 'metamorphoses' had not been used so much, I would say it's about something that grows into a butterfly and a bird—although it's very abstract—and then starts to go upward. I have to be on a ladder. I'm going to wear knee pads, because I'm not about to ruin my knees, when I start the piece on the floor. I have to perfect my backward somersaults.

"I was going to wear an incredible blond wig that cost $500. But I need the money for other things. In the end, I think you should tell the story with your soul and your body and not what you've got on."

Choreographed 'Wuthering Heights'

In addition to the Spanish dance, Miss Bewley will perform a work to music by Corelli; a series of Scott Joplin solos, and, to music by Frederick Jacobi, a dance on a subject dear to her—the character of the Brontë sisters. In 1973, Miss Bewley choreographed a version of "Wuthering Heights" for the Pennsylvania Ballet (she called it "Children of Darkness") but not before she walked over the Yorkshire moors and talked to the descendants of the Brontë family's neighbors. "I still have the heather I got there," she said.

Miss Bewley is surprised that people are surprised at her multi-faceted career. Several years ago, she designed the costumes for the Joffrey Ballet's "Le Beau Danube." "The main thing," she said, "is not that I can do everything better than anyone else, but that I love to do it."

Since her childhood in Louisville, Ky., she has drawn as well as danced. After a year of college, Miss Bewley joined

In all three plays, a man is the outsider, and no one is further outside than Evgeny Protpirenko in the third piece, "Among Friends." Evgeny, a famous topologist lecturing in Indiana, spends an evening at home with a schoolteacher, his wife and a woman who has been the teacher's best friend since childhood.

The friend detonates the plot by proposing that the two men swap lives. The husband is eager, perhaps seeing a quick escape from doldrums, but Evgeny is horrified. Sitting with these curious strangers, he wonders, who is "the Martian," himself or the others? By placing an alien in a familiar situation, Miss Jacker creates dramatic friction—although, in this case, there are perhaps too many sparks of seriousness for so brief a comedy.

The performances by Christina Pickles, Carol Nadell, William Wise and Richard K. Weber—as the waiter and the topologist—are agile. In common with the plays, the staging by Robert Mandel is concise. There are no wasted words, movements or furniture in "Other People's Tables."

Nicol Williamson Finds the Solution To Playing Holmes

SINCE THE URBANE and eternally unflappable Basil Rathbone has presumably passed on to the happy sleuthing ground, the producers of Nicholas Meyer's "The Seven-Per-Cent Solution"—a fanciful confection centering on the investigative collaboration between a drug-addicted Sherlock Holmes and a budding shrink named Sigmund Freud—had their work cut out for them. Their challenging chore was to come up with a hero cast in the gruffly virile modern mold, yet one who would not enrage the hordes of Rathbone buffs. The 100 percent successful solution to the problem turned out to be Nicol Williamson, a blissfully unpredictable, jovially scowling Scotsman who is striking the same kind of moody sparks in the film that he ignited on stage in such plays as "Inadmissible Evidence," "Hamlet," "Uncle Vanya" and "Macbeth."

Recently the customarily bombastic actor chatted serenely about his lauded performance in "The Seven-Per-Cent Solution," as well as other subjects, poetic and prosaic, pleasant and unpleasant. "I had never in my life seen a Sherlock Holmes film or read a Sherlock Holmes book," he said. "I come from a working-class family, and I didn't know who the hell Beatrix Potter or Winnie-the-Pooh or Arthur Conan Doyle was."

Many moviegoers are surprised by Mr. Williamson's deft display of comedic skill in "The Seven-Per-Cent Solution," perhaps because they missed his triumphant pinch-hitting for the ailing George C. Scott in the Broadway production of Neil Simon's "Plaza Suite." "What I love is comedy of circumstance," Mr. Williamson said, "and that's the strain that runs through 'The Seven-Per-Cent Solution.' It's married to characters who have been thoroughly developed, and so the power and the believability with-in the film make you feel that you are being taken along on a huge adventure. We had a wonderful experience making the film, even though there were certain emotional problems for me. I mean, how else can I put it except to say that my wife, Jill Townsend, was dumping me for another man? There is no hate now, though, no acrimony, and I'm relieved it's over. The important thing is that our son was not damaged."

Mr. Williamson speaks lovingly of his 3-year-old son, Luke, and he insists that children, as a group, are the world's most discerning critics. "They always tell you the absolute truth. I know I was a very tough audience as a kid. I remember that I loved Buster Keaton and Laurel and Hardy, but I thought Chaplin was contrived and self-indulgent—a technical genius, but a man with no heart. Give me the heart over the head any day."

Another childhood idol was Humphrey Bogart. "He was my favorite actor. Do you know why? Because underneath that tough exterior, there was always a slightly insecure, vulnerable humor. He was asking for a hand to be put in his hand. And like Spencer Tracy and Montgomery Clift—who had the most compelling eyes I've ever seen—he could always surprise you by some strange turn of comedy that was so real, so forceful."

The alternately gloomy and exuberant Mr. Williamson never dreamed of a life outside the theater. "Acting is all I know. But it's a painful, difficult profession. Actors are very insecure, vulnerable people, and we all need a little mercy in our lives. An actor is a guy who has to put a big bold face on, no matter how flimsy he feels."

Nicol Williamson as Sherlock Holmes
His sole narcotic is acting

Figuratively and literally, Mr. Williamson has struck numerous observers as more fleshy than flimsy, and his offstage theatrics have frequently outflashed his rehearsed routines—for example, such celebrated escapades as the backstage slugging of the producer David Merrick several years ago in Philadelphia and the more recent slapping of a chorus boy during the curtain calls for the wretched musical "Rex." Nor has his rambling through the realm of wine, women and song been totally unobserved.

"Most people in this profession who have anything to offer have a certain volatility," he explained, "but I don't run around screaming and hitting people. Apart from that slap in 'Rex,' for which I apologized, and the Merrick incident, I have never struck anyone. On the other hand, I am not scared of anyone. As for drinking, I don't touch hard liquor anymore. Oh, maybe a bottle of wine with a steak, or a couple of beers, or a little vodka with bouillon for lunch."

Unlike the cocaine-cherishing Holmes of "The Seven-Per-Cent Solution," Mr. Williamson does not dabble in drugs. "I'm scared of hard drugs. Someone once put something in a drink and I nearly went crazy for a whole day. I woke up in a tree in my garden, and I could only see things for about a quarter of an inch away. I knew then that if ever I took LSD, I would surely throw myself out of a window."

Thomas Wolfe said you can't go home again. He also said that only the dead know Brooklyn. But Laurence Mark, movie maniac, would be tempted to call the meritorious American author wrong on both counts. Many natives of Brooklyn are going home again, and a lot of lively newcomers are getting to know that bustling borough—or at least 30 Lafayette Avenue, home of the Brooklyn Academy of Music, where "Fabulous 59-Cent Flicks," a batch of movies assembled by Mr. Mark and members of the Brooklyn Academy staff, are screening these nights.

The series is called "Fabulous 59-Cent Flicks" be-cause 59 cents is the price of an individual program, which occasionally consists of a double bill. A 10-coupon subscription to the academy's theater—an elegant auditorium seating 1,100 people—can be purchased by mail order or at the box office. At a cost of $5.90, the coupons will admit you to 10 of the 29 programs being offered through next May 28—or, if you're a big-time spender, you may want to treat nine of your best friends to a night at the movies.

Tonight's program, part of a grouping entitled "Backstage: Theater People on Film," teams George Cukor's "A Double Life," starring Ronald Colman Signe Hasso, and Irving Pichel's rarely revived Begins at 8:30," with Ida Lupino and Monty Woo Tomorrow's Halloween treat will be "Theatre Blood," a gleefully ghoulish gem starring Vin Price as a vengeful ham who devises clever pu ments for unkind critics. Other entries in the "I stage" series are "Twentieth Century," "42d Str "The Royal Family of Broadway," "All About and Fellini's "Variety Lights."

Other Brooklyn Academy packages include "A to the Irish," with the lilting likes of "Playboy o Western World" and "Ryan's Daughter"; "The on Film," featuring "Freaks," "Lola Montes," Greatest Show on Earth" and "Man on a Tightr "The Homosexual on Film," highlighted by "S Bloody Sunday," "Strangers on a Train," "The formist" and "The Killing of Sister George," "Celebrating Coward: Noël on Film," a feast prising "Design for Living," "In Which We S "Bitter Sweet," "Private Lives" and "Brief counter."

Although Joan Plowright scored one of her glowing triumphs as the plucky teen-age hero Broadway's "A Taste of Honey" in 1960, her a ances since have been confined almost exclusiv the British stage. Fortunately, Miss Plowright known as Lady Olivier, is in the process of rem that deplorable situation by starring in Sidney et's film of Peter Shaffer's "Equus," now shoo Toronto. Richard Burton will play the role he took briefly on Broadway—that of the tor psychiatrist who struggles to cure a mental turbed youth who has gouged out the eyes horses; Peter Firth will repeat the role of th and Miss Plowright will portray his horrified

"I know when Larry and I first saw the London, we were quite disturbed," said the 4 old actress on a recent stopover in New Yo made us wonder about the things a child sees him in those first formative months. Some qu ing parents may put a mobile, a flying fis above an infant's crib, and that might give it an aversion to fish for the rest of his life. W even know what affects a child when it is womb.

"As a parent, there is a part of me that id with the mother in the play. I can imag bewilderment at being blamed for her son's gr behavior. A lot of parents feel that they giv children all they can in the way of educati love, and yet they can't finally account for wh child does, what he becomes. Maybe what t is saying is that we are all born alone and w alone, and somewhere in the middle we beco viduals, something which is not made up our mothers and fathers gave us, but a uniq That's what the mother in the play says—'Ev is itself.' In the end, I think the play is am It all depends on which character you identif

As on stage, the mutilation of the h "Equus" will be precipitated by the boy's a inability to have sex with a girl he has br the stable. In the film, however, real horse used, and even though the atrocity will be gi the violence will be much more graphically However, Miss Plowright, who detests viole not have to witness that particular scene not, in fact, summoned up the courage to intensely violent "Marathon Man," in wh rence Olivier gives one of the most stun formances of his career as a Nazi war crim practices heinous dental torture on Dustin "When Larry told be about that scene, hardly bear to listen. I know that contemp is violent and that film, as an art form reflect contemporary life. Still, I can't violence. Perhaps it is because I am a moth

A WHALE OF A COMEDY!

"HIGHLY COMIC. A terrifically intelligent, witty comedy. The entire cast is splendid." —Vincent Canby, New York Times

"THIS COMEDY SPARKLES WITH AUDACIOUSNESS. Marvelous originality, funny situations and dialogue, feisty ideas and jaunty characters, all of whom would be worth meeting." —William Wolf, Cue Magazine

"A ROMANTIC, MYSTIC, UTOPIAN COMEDY... about the seventies lunatic fringe of people in their twenties and thirties. This film stays suspended in the air, spinning—A MARVELOUS TOY." —Pauline Kael, The New Yorker

"★★★★! A UNIQUE FILM EXPERIENCE. The stars are eight marvelous characters." —Kathleen Carroll, New York Daily News

John Cage, composer

it, as the works of his contemporaries so often do not.

From Greece, the festival was offered a 1971 orgy of percussion, "Anarchia," by Nikos Mamangakis. Dean Anderson, the soloist, and a touring troupe of other percussionists rushed about the stage performing the usual prodigies demanded in such works. The audience was especially delighted by a fusillade of pistol shots and a follow-up scream of a siren that evoked both the ghost of Edgard Varèse and the soundtracks of late television movies.

The night wound to an end with a world premiere, Seymour Shifrin's "Chronicles" (1970), a five-part setting of Old Testament texts, sung in Hebrew by the New England Conservatory Chorus and a solo trio. The work exuded sincerity, devotion and reverence but contained amazingly few moments of real musical power. The idiom was roughly that of Schoenberg's "Moses und Aron," though without having that score's craggy contrasts to grip the attention.

Earlier in the day, a program of remarkable drabness was brightened slightly by Thomas Kessler's "Piano Control," in which a piano provided the imput material for a synthesizer that was propped on the music rack in front of the performer—Robert Black. This is called playing the synthesizer in "real time," in contrast to putting sounds on tape and playing them back and it has become a standard technique of popular musicians. Mr. Kessler, who is Swiss, achieved a few interesting tone mixes, especially in the final few moments.

Interesting chiefly for its implacable length—an empty half-hour — was a Boulezian piano sonata by René Koering of France, while a string quartet by Richard Meale of Australia made its only imprint by having the performers at one point play with their backs to the audience, further de-personalizing an already arid piece.

Eating idget Prices

FACE OF ever-rising restaurant prices, ssuring to discover that New York still umber of comfortable and pleasant din- ces offering good food and respectable ces that seem almost miraculous by to- ds. At the request of many readers who effect, that the fun of dining out is more dampened by astronomical checks, this periodically be devoted to two or three restaurants.

es, in general, include decent standards , service and atmosphere with interest- pared food that costs $7 to $7.50 urse meal. Since many people will not ch to eat, it is conceivable that the considerably less.

ng relatively inexpensive restaurants, t to remember that the management a greater turnover in order to meet 20 a person, it is reasonable to assume all evening; at $7 a person, an hour d a quarter would be more usual. It to avoid basically expensive foods, y cuts of veal and beef, or shellfish, ices quality or quantities will probably ed.

g a steady supply of high-quality, low- ts is no easy task, any suggestions e favorites will be welcome.

e feels no sense of deprivation when convivial Balkan-Armenian, a 64-year- on 27th Street between Madison and While many of the details of the décor ose scrutiny to be somewhat corny, fect is pleasantly all-purpose Middle rmenian combined. Tables topped with are small and a bit close, and the y friendly, can be abrupt during peak general the feeling is one of relaxed one token entree of chicken, all the on lamb, most succulently prepared the tourlu guvech — golden-brown shanks smothered under a ratatouillelike blanket of stewed vegetables. Tender chops of shoulder lamb are delicious on the currant-and-pignoli-studded fancy rice pilaf, and the eggplant stuffed with ground lamb, spices, tomato and onion is so richly seasoned it will hardly be thought an economy dish.

While most of the entrees on the menu range from $4.25 to $5.10 à la carte, anyone willing to go a dollar or two higher should try the excellent shish kebab, or scara steak, a thick broiled lamb steak, cut from the leg, and done pink inside if so ordered.

Not all of the appetizers came up to the superb quality of the stuffed vine leaves and mussels, each enriched with a cinnamon-perfumed pilaf; the fragrant eggplant and tomato stew that is imam bayildi; the golden lentil soup, or the rich hot madzoonabour, a pungent yogurt soup thickened with barley. Desserts include outstanding examples of the flaky nut-and-syrup enriched Armenian pastries, the two best being the rolled checkme, and tel kadayiff, a similar affair based on a shredded-wheat pastry.

There is full wine and liquor service here, and the only real flaw is the lack of the authentic sesame-encrusted Armenian bread, lavash. Sesame breadsticks and Italian bread have to suffice. A full dinner at Balkan-Armenian, with soup, entree, dessert and coffee (try the syrupy Armenian brew) would come to about $6.75, and lunch runs about one-third less.

Totally different in character, the Czechoslovak restaurant Praha, on the corner of First Avenue, and 73d Street, offers a more modern and handsome dining room with larger tables, wider spaced and aglow with candlelight. One of the city's best buys has to be the $7.25 duck dinner here, starting with a heady beef consommé adrift with noodles and parsley, or a daily soup that might be pea, lentil, potato or liver dumpling. The half duckling is long, lean and as crisp as parchment, moist and flavorful within, and is accompanied by a thin, golden, savory pan gravy. The proper reward for this gravy is to be ladled over one of the lightest bread dumplings I've ever seen, a cloudlike affair spongy with yeast so that it absorbs any sauces it comes in contact with. Well-cooked sauerkraut or sweet and sour red cabbage, both flavored with caraway seeds, round out this main course and, as a matter of fact, the dinner as well.

Other excellent main courses, priced the same as the duck or even lower, include the snow-white, fork-tender rabbit in a velvety, gently spiced cream sauce; sliced boiled beef in a dill cream sauce; pale green stuffed cabbage with pork and rice filling, and an earthy Serbian goulash fiery with hot paprika. The only category of cooking to be avoided at Praha is the frying, as breadings tend to be soft and redolent of not-quite-fresh lard.

Again, at slightly higher prices, the crisp, savory roast goose and the lean roast pork would be excellent choices.

Desserts are meals in themselves. At each visit I am torn between the delicate crepes, palacinky, rolled with prune jam lekvar; the prune-filled steamed dumplings with a creamy cheese and butter sauce, and the warm, crumbly nut strudel. For a change, start with the Czech liqueur, slivovitz, and with the meal try the clear golden Pilsner Urquell beer.

If Praha is crowded, you may be seated in the Bratislava Room, generally reserved for private parties, but sometimes open to the public. Although decent and pleasant enough, it lacks the glowing red warmth of the main dining room, so state a preference when you make reservations. Service here is competent and helpful, and there is a large, friendly neighborhood bar at the entrance.

WAVERLY INN—16 Bank St. 929-4377. It is easy to linger all evening over dinner in this enclosed courtyard paved with flagstones and vaulted by tall, old trees. Everything on the menu is homemade and freshly prepared from the breads to the vegetables.
Begin with a rich vegetable soup or a spicy chilled gazpacho, served with a basket of freshly baked rolls. Then try a delicately broiled lake trout with lemon or the memorable boneless chicken breast sauteed in lemon and garlic. All entrees are served with a crisp mixed salad and a choice of two impeccably fresh vegetables. For dessert, decide between the rich Wellesly fudge cake or a perfect piece of pecan pie—or split both with your partner. The menu here does vary because all items are fresh from the day's market.

OCTOBER IS RESTAURANT MONTH

When Irish Bars Are Smiling

By FRANK J. PRIAL

"Booze and iloquence," said Mr. Dooley many years ago, "has both passed out iv our public life." Finley Peter Dunne, Mr. Dooley's creator, was writing during Prohibition. Booze has returned, of course, but eloquence, alas, is still in short supply. Except, perhaps, in the Irish bars on weekends.

The Irish have always had a way with words, and bartenders always have been among the most silver-tongued of Irishmen. Wasn't Dooley a barman himself? There are those who will swear that the Irish bartender may be the last true connoisseur in this country of the language of Yeats and Swift.

Years ago, when the great chronicler of Third Avenue, John McNulty, made his first trip to Ireland, he discovered to his surprise that the Ireland most Americans fancy is just a dream. In a way, New York's modern Irish bars are much the same. At their best they are clever interpretations of the Irish bar theme. At their worst, they are poor parodies.

If the term "Irish bar" is loosely interpreted, there are literally hundreds of them in the city, from the southernmost of the two Rosie O'Gradys, at 211 Pearl Street, near the Battery to the Bunratty Pub and Durty Nelly's at 4 and 119 West Kingsbridge Road in the Bronx.

Definitions

Over at Desmond's at 244 East 53d Street (753-1000) the other night, for example, a customer finished his glass and called for his bill. The American bartender merely nodded assent. But the big Irish lad working at the other end of the bar broke into a smile and called out: "Sure, you'll have another before you go?" Who could resist?

What makes a good Irish bar? The answer is a good Irish bartender. And what makes a good Irish bartender? "They're not made. They're born," said Desmond Crofton, one of the owner's of Desmond's and a raft of other Irish places around New York. "They've got to have patience, understanding and a bit of a sense of humor," he said.

What about that legendary Irish charm? "Oh, now that's just taken for granted," he added.

The bars themselves have little in common. They can be small and snug or they can be big and lively. They may draw a neighborhood crowd like that at Nugents on 207th Street, a singles crowd like that at the Green Derby at 978 Second Avenue or tired businessmen like those at Rosie O'Grady's at 41 Murray Street in the financial district. Some feature Irish music; others are no less Irish for the lack of it.

A true Irish bar is not always a place of infernal din and mindless babble—although there can be a bit of that on a Saturday night at Flanagan's at 1215 First Avenue (472-0300) when they're three deep at the bar and the folk singers are shouting defiance to the English tyrants.

A true Irish bar is a quiet place betimes. There is a blackness that comes over the Irish spirit that must be exorcised in a quiet place. The silence in a dim, old-fashioned bar can really be the sound of Irish drinkers wrestling with their souls.

P. J. Clarke's

Three of the best-known Irish bars in the city are P. J. Clarke's on Third Avenue at 55th Street, Charley O's at 33 West 48th Street in Rockefeller Center and Costello's at 225 East 44th Street.

Clarke's (PL 9-1650) was once a true Irish bar. That was back in the days when the Third Avenue El roared and rumbled overhead and before Ray Milland made "The Lost Weekend" there. There was once a genuine P. J. Clark, too. But aside from the bartender Frank Conafrey, there is nothing really Irish about the place anymore.

Saved from demolition a few years back, and sitting now like a sculpted object on the plaza of the huge new skyscraper that looms up beside it, Clarke's is a haunt for the city's upwardly mobile, not a true Irish bar.

Charley O's

Charley O's (582-7141) is the ultimate modern Irish bar. Moving in a decade ago, the planners and architects created an Irish place from the ground up. They even created a fictitious Irish proprietor, Charley himself, and the bar is open from 11:30 A.M. to 11:30 P.M. Closed Sunday.

But Charley O's has worked. The corporate owners have faded away. The new boss, a young chap with the most un-Irish name of Peter Ashkenazy, has made a change or two, but he has been clever enough to cling to the key to the success of any Irish bar or Irish bar manqué, the bartenders.

At Charley O's they include fellows with names such as Declan Muldoon, Michael O'Connor and Patrick Campbell, and among them they must have 150 years of experience in snugs here and in Ireland.

Costello's

Costello's (682-9713), once on the southeastern corner of 43d Street and Third Avenue, is now a much lesser place in style and cachet a block north at 44th Street. Costello's was where Ernest Hemingway broke a blackthorn stick, the traditional Irish jousting tool, over his own head in what was said to have been a kind of virility match with John O'Hara. Open from noon to 4 A.M. weekdays, and from 11 A.M. to 7 P.M. on Saturday. (Closed Sunday.)

And it was on Costello's walls that James Thurber once sketched some of his drawings. The pictures became vague under successive layers of grease and were touched up by amateurs.

Costello's subsisted on writers. Not just The New Yorker crowd who actually had to trudge rather far east for their succor, but also the reporters and editors on The Daily News and The New York Mirror. Both were close enough for those quick ones that involve only the briefest absences from the newsroom.

Gallagher's

Gallagher's (245-5336) is up on the northern rim of the theater district at 228 West 52d Street off Broadway, and there was a time when Jimmy Breslin hung around the bar there to lend it a little style and Irishness one-generation removed. But Gallagher's, while good, is really too fast-moving and too impersonal to be a true Irish bar, even a New York-style Irish bar. Hours, 11 A.M. to midnight daily.

O'Neill Group

There are three partners in the O'Neill group: Terry O'Neill, Desmond Crofton and Gerry Toner. They started with the Green Derby in 1964, which operates at 978 Second Avenue.

Other bars under the same ownership are:

Desmond's (753-1000), where, alas, a jukebox thumps out mindless country and western music a great deal of the time during its opening hours from noon to 4 A.M.; John Barleycorn (YU 6-1088) at 209 East 45th Street; the Abbey Tavern (532-1978) at 354 Third Avenue near 26th Street; Barrymore's Pub (541-4500) at 267 West 45th Street in the theater district, and Flanagan's, formerly Sullivan's, at 1215 First Avenue near 66th Street.

John Barleycorn is open from 11 A.M. to 2 A.M. and on Sunday from 4:30 P.M. to 2 A.M.; Abbey Tavern, from noon to 4 A.M. daily, and Barrymore's from noon to 2 A.M. Desmond's is closed Saturdays and Sundays in the summer.

Flanagan's may be the most popular of the lot. It is appropriately dark and ruminative of a Friday or Satuday afternoon, but there is rousing Irish music every night. Sean Fleming, Jesse Owens and James Kean are the resident balladeers.

Neighborhood Bars

It is in areas like Inwood and parts of the Bronx and Queens where there are still Irishmen on both sides of the bars. They are neighborhood taverns where housewives stop in for a few in the afternoon, where people know one another and strangers stand out.

There are pictures of athletes on the walls, notices of outings and charter flights to Dublin and often a dart board, well worn from casual and tournament play. They are the bars such as Costello's North (783-0004) at 4930 Broadway and the Old Shieling (569-9378) at 505 West 207th Street in Inwood.

The New York Irish are fiercely proud of the land of their birth. Now and then, a bit of local pride crops up. "They're pouring Guinness all along Roosevelt Avenue in Flushing" said a Leitrim man behind a bar in Manhattan.

"And," said his partner, his voice dropping to a conspiratorial whisper, "Bridie McManus, at the Liffey Tavern (429-8005) in Jackson Heights, pours the best pint of Guinness in New York. As good as Dublin." The Liffey, if you are thirsty, is at 75-15 Broadway in Jackson Heights.

Est. 1879.
A visit to Gage & Tollner is a nostalgic trip into the past. For we are one of the last of the great original Gay 90s eating houses. Today, we are a landmark. Our elegant dining room still echoes with the gaiety of the "good old days." Our menu still draws patrons from near and far to savor what many call the best American-style cooking in the country. And the service continues to reflect the hospitality of that bygone era. At Gage & Tollner, the art of making patrons happy has never been lost. It's how we came to fame.

Art: Early Photos By Robert Frank

By HILTON KRAMER

BETWEEN an artist's myth and the reality of his life and work, there are inevitably certain discrepancies. The myth seizes on extremes of feeling, whereas the reality—more often than not—is a subtler mixture of more variegated emotions and perceptions. And while such myths always have an obvious appeal, they are never sufficient for a complete understanding of either the artist or his work.

Take the case of Robert Frank, the celebrated Swiss-born photographer whose early pictures—taken in Europe in the late 1940's and early 50's, before he immigrated to the United States—are now on exhibition at the Marlborough Gallery, 40 West 57th Street (through Nov. 20).

From the publication of his book, "The Americans," which appeared first in France (1958) and then in America (1959), Mr. Frank did indeed become something of a legend and an influence on a whole generation of younger photographers. For the American edition of that memorable book of photographs, derived from Mr. Frank's travels in the United States in 1955-56, Jack Kerouac wrote an introductory essay. They collaborated again, this time together with the painter Alfred Leslie, in making a film, "Pull My Daisy" (1961), which proved to be a classic documentary of the Beat Generation.

It was, then, as the photographer of the Beat sensibility that Mr. Frank became a legend. He was actually always a better artist than most of the Beat writers. His pictures of American life—sharp, wayward, abrasive, unexpected, and often painfully funny—seemed to give us the lowdown on small-town American life, with its homely rituals and unintended absurdities. In Mr. Frank's pictures, the familiar acquired the look of something distant and alien.

The special quality of these pictures, that combined an air of familiarity with a very biting point of view, has since been widely imitated, and it was perhaps for this reason (among others) that Mr. Frank himself abandoned all work in that mode. He now lives in seclusion in Nova Scotia.

The pictures now at Marlborough strike a very different note. The sense of alien distance is completely absent from them, and completely missing, too, are abrasive emotions. There is a series of lovely Parisian scenes in which flowers are a dominant motif and delicate glimpses of Parisian parks, gardens and streets. There are pictures of Spanish children on swings, Spanish women in a religious procession, a London businessman walking beside a leafless tree in a misty light.

Delicacy is indeed the keynote in these early pictures. The prints here are paler than those of the American pictures, the emotions more romantic, the style more conventional. Occasionally there is an emphatic anticipation of the later mode — the most stunning is a great picture of limousines, taken in London in 1951, that is a masterpiece — but by and large, these pictures belong, in every sense, to another world.

Yet they tell us something important about Mr. Frank's "American" pictures — about the delicate and injured emotions that lie buried in them — and in so doing, they tell us something about the "anti-art" style that "The Americans" did so much to foster.

Along with Mr. Frank's pictures, Marlborough is also a selection of work by the [illegible] tographer Gotthard Schuh (1[illegible] with whom Mr. Frank was on[illegible] ated. Schuh was a well-know[illegible] journalist in his day, and he [illegible] ly a man of sizable gifts. T TO THINK about ude Monet is as hot a stion as any now gen- lly discussed among peo- y French 19th-century Monet died in 1926 there ce during which nobody him very much. There teresting moment after t which the late paint- ilies were on offer (at es us as laughably low d few takers. But how ve been rated higher, thought of as formless too evocative of the indness?

quite do, either. Great be judged only by the they legitimize later net had been given— ugly—the ultimate put- e ("He was only an eye!") and for a long e shadow of his more mes.

Daniel Wildenstein's s early years (1840- lth of documentation n. Monet emerged as new him to be: the pen in his acceptance erision. But he also rtist as to whom a great deal more remained to be said.

This is therefore just the right moment for the Claude Monet exhibition, which has been arranged by the Acquavella Galleries, 18 East 79th Street, in aid of the New York Hospital. (It will be on view through Nov. 28. Admission is $2 (students 75 cents), and the catalogue with its 68 color plates and an introduction by Andrew Forge costs $10.

Monet was so productive, and his paintings were so quick to catch on in this country, that on the face of it the organization of such a show presents no problems. But in point of fact the Acquavella show includes a sizable proportion of work which has been seen rarely or not at all; and there are points at which it offers a real illumination. To see a whole wall of paintings from the Gare St. Lazare series of 1877 is for instance an adventure that quite consoles us for not having any of the paintings of Rouen Cathedral.

Also upstairs is a painting of the Palazzo Mula in Venice, done in 1908, that altogether belies Monet's modest estimate of his Venetian paintings. After the all-over flicker of so many earlier Monets we suddenly realize that this painting sits like marble. Vertical answers to horizontal just as firmly as it does in the waterlily paintings of 1903-07; but there is the difference that the subject in this case is a grandly ordered architecture. Never did Monet coax his organ-notes of blue to better effect than in this sumptuous painting, which "holds" from many yards away with an absolute assurance.

Kenneth Clark annoyed a lot of people when he said in a lecture many years ago that there was "a Brahmsian heartiness about Monet." The partisans of Brahms banded together with the partisans of Monet, and it was quite some time before peace was restored. But actually we all know what he meant, and even the sage choice of middle-period Monet at the Acquavella includes garden scenes that are relentlessly busy, flowerpieces that encouraged immumerable bad paintings by other people in the 1920's and 30's, and a seascape done at Etretat that makes the famous flying-buttresslike cliffside look like a close-up of a centenarian human knee.

After perusal of such paintings as these, the initial room of this show becomes more than ever refreshing. That still life of pears, apples and grapes, for instance: painted in 1867, this could be set beside the monumental fruit pieces that Courbet painted in prison just a year or two later and look as solid as any of them. It can stand beside a Cézanne of a comparable subject and not be disgraced. As for the ridged whiteness of the unfolded cloth, we can go back to the Spanish still-life school of the 17th century and not find anything more rigorous in its austerity. Maybe Impressionism was just one big mistake?

But when we see the "Embarkation" of two years later, we notice the Manetlike incisiveness of the human characterization, our hearts leap up at the beauty of the parasol held high in the shade of the tree, and we decide that Impressionism was the best thing that ever happened. And the riverscapes done at Argenteuil in 1872 confirm this. Monet at that point had still 54 years to go, but we may ask ourselves how many painters ever made so good a beginning.

Twentieth Century Masters on Paper (Robert Elkon Gallery, 1063 Madison Avenue at 81st Street): This stylish little show will delight anyone who looks back with nostalgia to the time when Dubuffet was the new French artist, when the young Matta astonished by the prodigality of his invention, when Balthus was producing four or five paintings a year, when Auguste Herbin was bringing a tonic brilliance to the notion of geometricart abstract art, and when Robert Motherwell had so many ideas he didn't know which one to put down on paper first: the late 1940's, that is to say. Through Nov. 3.

Lila Katzen (Cortelia Gallery, 41 East 57th Street): Ideally, Lila Katzen's steel sculptures need space, light and the open air. Only then can a piece like her recent "Priapos" make its full effect. Miss Katzen draws with the steel, as much as she sculpts; and the alternations of real rust with a razorblade's brightness add up to a voluptuous spectacle. Within the limitations of space, light and a particularly hostile flooring material, the new sculptures in her show come off very well: in particular, the one called "Double Rotunda." Through Nov. 12.

Sculpture by Horia Damian (Seagram Plaza, Fifth Avenue at 52d Street): Mr. Damian's huge and equivocal yellow mound has moved from the Guggenheim Museum to the front of the Seagram Building, where it will stay through Nov. 12. Hospitality has paid off, in that its color, its texture, its scale and its slithery whaleback form contrast ideally with the rectangular bronze facade of New York's most distinguished office building.

Art People | Grace Glueck

A VAST GOLDFISH BOWL, harboring 40-foot carp, 30-foot anemones and other exotic denizens of the deep has materialized at 88 Pine Street, the same office building locale that launched Red Groom's "Ruckus New York" on its way to uptown fame last year. Dubbed an "air aquarium" by its creator, Otto Piene, the fishbowl actually comprises the building's glass-windowed lobby space, measuring 6,400 square feet, and its inhabitants are inflatable soft sculptures that swell and deflate in a programmed sequence effected by timed air blowers.

So, while a carp made of transperent polyethylene puffs out its body, fins and gills, a neighboring sea flower of red spinnaker cloth gracefully retracts its soft spikes to await the next cycle. Lobsters, blowfish and other briny fauna, hung from the ceiling and thrusting up from the floor, do their numbers too, driving children who visit the project—which is called "Anemones"—wild with glee, and titillating their adult companions.

Mr. Piene, who functions as director of the Center for Advanced Visual Studies at M.I.T., achieved his creation with the aid of a small corps of fellow artists and students as part of a workshop endeavor sponsored by Creative Time, Inc., the same nonprofit arts organization that sponsored "Ruckus New York." Using Mr. Piene's designs and some of their own, the artists laid out polyethylene and spinnaker cloth on huge brown paper patterns, cut out the shapes of the sea creatures, and stitched them up on home sewing machines lent by Singer. (The space in the building comes courtesy of Overseas Orient Associates.)

The German-born creator of "Anemones" views it as an attempt to "create an environment of wonder and surprise." Handy to the nearby Fulton Fish Market (as well as staid Wall St.), the acquarium "brings to an essentially urban situation a whiff of nature's elements," Mr. Piene notes, adding that his theme is "scale, along with movement." He'd like to do "Anemones" on a larger scale, like a fleet of flying fish in the sky, he says.

Creative Time considers "Anemones," open free from Tuesday through Friday, 11:30 A.M. to 2 P.M., and Saturday from noon to 3:30 P.M. through Dec. 31, part of its attempt to help contemporary artists "create new works in highly visible spaces." Well, they've done it again.

A 19th-century African sculpture of wood, nearly four feet high and known as the Grand Kongo fetish, has star billing this week at the Detroit Institute of Arts, which has just acquired it at a record price (for a work of African art in this country) of $275,000. The sculpture is that of a male figure studded with nails that manipulate its magical powers; it sports a cowrie shell in its navel to seal in magic juices. Its rarity is compared by Michael Kan, Detroit's curator of African, Oceanic and New World cultures, with that of a Michelangelo in a collection of High Renaissance art.

"I was speechless when I saw it," says Mr. Kan (a recent transplant to Detroit from the Brooklyn Museum), who discovered the fetish in the gallery of a New York dealer, Walter Randel. "A Kongo fetish of this size and quality is so unusual that for a curator it's a once-in-a-lifetime object."

The fetish, known in Africa as a nkonde, (and to collectors as the Great Deity of Majumba), was made by the Kongo tribe, which inhabited the coastal area of present-day Zaire. Around 1903 it was brought by German missionaries to Europe and acquired by the Leipzig Ethographic Museum (now in East Germany) which recently traded it off.

The Grand Kongo is the first major purchase from a $1.2 million gift received by the museum's Founders Society from the late Mrs. Edsel Ford, specifically for the acquisition of African art. It will be the spectacular centerpiece of Detroit's African collection, whose nucleus was established by the late Robert H. Tannahill, a longtime trustee, and by Judge and Mrs. G. Mennen Williams, of Grosse Point Farms.

By way of lagniappe, Dr. Frederick Cummings, the museum's director, has announced plans for a new, $400,000 six-gallery complex to house not only the African but the American Indian, pre-Columbian and Oceanic collections held by Detroit as well.

Alexander "Sox" Calder, a papermaker by trade (he's board chairman of the Union Camp Corporation) was slightly puzzled to receive in his suite at the Waldorf Astoria recently several boxes of brochures promoting "Calder's Universe," the show of work by Alexander ("Sandy") Calder, the renowned mobile-maker, now at the Whitney Museum.

But by the time "Sox" Calder dialed his friend Andrew Sigler, president of Champion International Corporation, the paper manufacturing firm that's sponsoring the Calder show, to ask why he'd received them, he'd already guessed the answer. The hotel, given the flyers for distribution to its guests, had mistakenly sent them up to the man it believed to be the artist.

It happens all the time to Mr. Calder, a modest man who says his art world credentials are limited, and it used to happen to his late father, Alexander Calder Sr., who was also nicknamed Sandy and who, oddly enough, resembled the artist. "Sox" gets offers to purchase specific art works, requests for lectures and personal appearances and items for autographing. When "Sandy" Calder painted a Braniff plane several years ago, "Sox" Calder received mail and phone calls from all over the country.

Once "Sox" Calder was invited to address a group of guests at a luncheon. "I didn't recognize the host's name, but the guest list had people like Salvador Dali on it," he recalls. "My office associates dared me to do it, but I didn't have the nerve." Nor could he quite muster up the gall to accept the honorary degree proffered by Swarthmore College—which mistook him for "Sandy"—about a year ago.

The other day, "Sox" Calder finally met "Sandy" Calder at the Whitney. It was his first live view of "Sandy" and also of his work. "Amazing," is Sox's verdict on both. "What's more, he knew who I was and he even knew that my brother Stanley was a golf champion in New Jersey."

A "Tribute to John Cage" by the irrepressible video iconoclast Nam June Paik will appear on Channel 13 Wednesday from 11 to 11:30 P.M., the night before the New York Philharmonic performance of Mr. Cage's new piece, "Renga with Apartment House 1776." By way of a teaser, Mr. Paik, who says the show is "a culmination of my 20-year flirtation with Cage's art and mind," reveals that in one sequence Mr. Cage consults the I Ching to find good locales for New York street music.

Music: A Revue of Unheard Tunes

For more than a decade, Ben Bagley has been producing an invaluable series of records on which the less familiar songs of leading composers for the musical theater are featured. On Wednesday he brought a sampling of these "Revisited" albums to the stage at Town Hall as part of the "Interludes" series, complete with a spoken version of his liner notes in which the line between truth and fantasy is outrageously smudged and backed with slides in which stage designs by Shirley Kaplan were mixed with nudes, bearded ladies, Lois De Fee, the 6-foot, 7-inch nightclub bouncer and quondam stripper, vintage movie ingenues and other outrageous figments of the photographer's art.

His purpose, he said, was to point up "how much more jolly and tuneful musicals were in the 30's and 40's" than they have been recently. What he wanted of a musical, he said, was to "tap my toe and walk out with a take-home tune." And for the better part of an hour, assisted by three singers—Marilyn Cooper, Denise Powell and Larry O'Leno—and with songs by Cole Porter, Vernon Duke, Rodgers and Hart, Jerome Kern, Oscar Hammerstein and Kurt Weill, several of them unpublished and all but two or three quite unfamiliar, Mr. Bagley made his jolly and tuneful point, winding up with a superb "take home" tune from his revue, "Shoestring '57," that was whistled and hummed up the aisles, through the lobby and out onto 43d Street.

Miss Cooper handled the torchier songs in a sinuously throaty style and Mr. O'Leno, playing piano accompaniments and singing, had the flair and verve for the wittier lyrics of Cole Porter, John Latouche and Lorenz Hart. Miss Powell, a sweet and earnest-looking girl with a pleasant voice, seemed out of her depth with this kind of material but this scarcely slowed the pace of the production because Mr. Bagley was always back after a chorus with more slides, more semi-non sequiturs and an obvious affection for this music that lit up even the occasional slips in taste in his commentary.

12 Murals to Decorate Parsons Blvd. Station

Twelve 4 by 4-foot murals, painted in acrylic on masonite, have been mounted on railings at the west end of the Parsons Boulevard Station of the E and F lines in Queens as part of an effort by the New York City Transit Authority to improve the appearance of subway stations.

The murals were painted by art students of Hillcrest High School, who received a $1,000 grant from the America the Beautiful Fund of the New York State Council on the Arts to purchase the necessary art materials and supplies.

Each of the 12 panels was designed by a student and another dozen students helped with the painting.

...ort pieces as com...prising a new decorative-arts field, applying Asian traditional techniques and labor-intensive decoration to Western needs," Mr. Forbes said. One aspect of the sofa that shows this, he continued, is its portability, which was worked out in an ingenious manner quite unlike Occidental craftsmanship. The wood-frame cane panels are joined with six brass screws, which are designed to be opened with a special key. The parts disassemble so that the sofa could be shipped almost flat.

"So many of these pieces," Mr. Forbes observed, "are neither wholly East nor wholly West, but stand on their own, suspended in tension between each, drawing from each culture and binding the two cultures together in a unique way. The negative aspects of colonialism were manifold. Here was one that was positive."

Mr. Stair is also responsible for some sleuthing and identification of China Trade material on view and for sale. The dealer purchased a writing and game table in another New York shop recently. And although it was identified by the former owner as English, he thought otherwise. His suspicions were confirmed when he inspected his purchase. He found that the drawers fitted in the lift-up desk section are of camphor, not oak, as are those in English desks of the Queen Anne period. And the drawers and cabinet frame were signed by the maker in Chinese characters.

Scholarly Detection

Even before Mr. Stair had studied the drawers, he was certain, he said, that the lacquered table-desk was not Occidental but Oriental. The quality and style of the lacquer decoration, he explained, is far more Chinese than British craftsmen were capable of producing around 1730, when this piece was executed. And, he said, the lavishly lacquered apron of the back of the piece was the real clincher in identifying the source.

"Such a table was placed against the wall in British homes," he said. "Therefore, no sensible English craftsman would have bothered to decorate a surface that was never seen."

Most of what is on view in this show is in no way mysterious. It is forthright and refreshingly Oriental in character and easily identifiable. An early 19th-century enamel bowl and pitcher show how craftsmen at first preferred a restrained handling of floral motifs and later delighted in combining as many colors and patterns as possible on such pieces as the pitcher.

As for the high Victorian pieces—both the furniture and the silver on view—some may well believe that the design has become too exuberant for their tastes. As we become better acquainted with such work, however, we are bound to be able to appreciate better the explosion of detail at which craftsmen of the period excelled everywhere in the world and in virtually every material.

The works for sale range from $112 for a pair of porcelain jugs to $95,000 for the floral-splash porcelain dinner service that started it all. But in between there are superb selections of porcelains from Elinor Gordon, boxes and trays from Heirloom & Howard of London, enameled wall brackets from Frederick Victoria, a porcelain elephant from Lloyd Hyde, silk wall hangings from Amos W. Shepard and portraits from Berry-Hill Galleries Inc.

What was most appealing about both pieces was the pungent immediacy and complete confidence of the instrumentalists. Mr. Davies's music of this sort has its overt charms and makes a nice metaphorical statement; once one gets the idea, however, it can begin to seem a bit gimmicky.

Which was also the problem with the Schoenberg, although here the proper adjective isn't so much "gimmicky" as "silly." Once again, the instrumental work was superb. But Miss Thomas, for all the beauty of her voice and the conscientiousness of her musicianship, wasn't commanding or theatrical enough for either the "Thomme armé" or especially the Schoenberg, and her handling of the always problematic "Sprechgesang" in the latter seemed too close to singing.

But by far the biggest problem was the staging: Miss Thomas in Pierrot costume bathed in flickering spotlight, right next to the instrumentalists whose lights glared into the audience's eyes. At the first performance, the Pierrot was costumed, but played in front of a wall that hid the instrumentalists from view. The Fires of London likes to think of itself as a music-theater troupe, but Wednesday's Schoenberg was a most unhappy compromise between the two.

It is sculptural movement as well, based on linked arms and entwinements. The dancers are in white upon a white floor cloth. As they move out of their first heroic pose, the two women act as handmaidens, then playmates for the men in his godlike pursuits. These are not mimed but are incorporated as gesture into the choreography, and suggest archery, swimming and playing a lyre.

None of these moments is literal. It is the movement that counts and this cast knows how to keep the flow of the choreography going without falling into a static pose. Mr. LaFosse has a special mix of emotional intensity and classic style. He is truly having a magnificent season—his solos in "At Midnight" were outstanding on the same program.

Mystic Seaport

By MICHAEL KNIGHT

MYSTIC, CONN., is one of those special places where the past has never really died, but rather lives on elbow to elbow with the present. Sometimes the village's history of sailing ships and whaling captains gets lost amid the bustle of 20th-century life and the hustle of commercial activity. And sometimes, when the light is just right and the air just so, the past takes over for a few moments for those willing to stop and look.

That process is at its easiest and mellowest in the fall, when the crowds of tourists go home and the serious adventurer has the place pretty much to himself. Not yet winter—the days are typically brisk and the nights only nippy—autumn is the time here when the light is most often right and the air is most often conducive to reveries of what once was.

The main attraction, of course, is Mystic Seaport, the 40-acre recreation of a mid-19th-century seacoast village. The best time is early in the morning or late in the day, when the unpaved streets are deserted, the gaslights flicker, the mist rises off the Mystic River and the ships creak at their moorings. But the past lingers on everywhere in Mystic as well and there are other places to look for it too.

History

Mystic was settled in 1654, 17 years after the conclusion of the Pequot War and the departure from southern Connecticut of the surviving Indians in slave ships bound for the West Indies. The soil of Mystic, like that of other coastal cities and villages on the eastern end of Connecticut, was poor and thin and stony, and attention turned immediately to the sea.

The village thrived on local fishing, shipbuilding and coastal trade in its early years and was a major Revolutionary War stronghold for the Americans, both as a safe port for supplying the New England armies and as a base for privateers harassing the British fleets. After the War of 1812 the village, like most of the surrounding settlements, boomed with the building of clipper ships, and the worldwide whaling trade, both of which turned many residents into millionaires. With the decline of the clipper ships and the whaling industry the village slipped into a backwater frequented by yachtsmen, fishermen and summer visitors from Hartford, New Haven and Providence.

In 1929 three local residents, distressed by the rapid passing of an era they had know and loved, bought the last of the six Mystic River shipyards that had once made the area famous and opened a small museum on the site. By 1940, most of the 60 Mystic Seaport buildings—many of them original moved to the shipyard, others re-creations—were in place, and became a magnet for both tourists and the donations of wealthy maritime buffs, who still are the seaport's sole financial support.

The Port

Mystic Seaport is an ambitious attempt to recreate the past through its villages, buildings, crafts and vessels. It succeeds magnificently when the crowds are thin and only adequately when the lines of people waiting to board the wooden whaling ship Charles W. Morgan or the square-rigged Joseph Conrad obscure the view of the river, blot out the sound of sea chanties or the crewmen demonstrating how fish were first split and then salted.

The grounds themselves are a painstaking restoration of streets and buildings that include homes, a bank, a drug store, a chandlery and a variety of boat sheds. The seaport's preservation shipyard—where carpenters, riggers, caulkers and sailmakers recreate old ships using nearly lost arts—is open to visitors and demonstrations of other crafts, such as net mending, sail setting, whaleboat rowing and ship carving, are held elsewhere at various times throughout the day.

Two new additions to the seaport include an elegant walnut and gold-leaf recreation of the interior of the Benjamin F. Packard, a post-clipper era "down East" cargo ship, and the Sabino, the last American coal-fired steamboat still operating. The ship chugs up and down the river every hour on the half-hour and takes on adult passengers at $1.75 and children for $1. That fee is the only extra charge levied at the seaport.

Admission to the seaport itself is $4.25 for adults and $1.75 for children. Schedule at least three hours for a brief look at the highlights, more for a thorough immersion. The seaport is open from 9 A.M. to 5 P.M. seven days a week (203) 536-2631.

Shopping

Olde Mistick Village, which is a developer's attempt to recreate a Colonial-era New England village and then use it as a modern shopping center, has already become a landmark and tourist attraction in its own right since it was completed a few years ago. Combining a successful trend in current mass entertainment—special interest amusement parks—with modern merchandising techniques and plenty of free parking, the "village" is cleaner, brighter and neater than the real thing ever was.

Amid its brick-lined walks, duck ponds, water wheels and floral displays are 45 stores including a bank, a dairy bar, a bookstore, a jewelry shop, a boutique and a shop that sells bathroom accessories.

The village stands prominently at the foot of the Interstate 95 exit ramp, beckoning to travelers who have come in search of the region's history and attracting many of them before they get much farther. At the very least, they find a futuristic marketplace clothed in the guise of the past. The village is open from 9 A.M. to 5 P.M., seven days a week, when local authorities permit.

The Aquarium

Mystic's third major tourist attraction makes no claims at all on history. But the Mystic Marine Life Aquarium (203) 536-9631 boasts of the only whales in captivity in Connecticut, which recently chose the whale as the state animal in deference to its prominent place in the nation's history. Two beluga or white, whales are on display in the aquarium's indoor tank and are reportedly beginning to learn how to do tricks. Already much more accomplished are the bottle-nosed dolphins and California sea lions that give hourly shows each day starting at 10 A.M. In addition, the aquarium boasts 30 living exhibits that include a one-ton Stellar sea lion, rare blue and calico lobsters and other esoterica of the deep.

Admission is $3 for adults, and $1.50 for children 5 to 14 years old. The aquarium is open from 9 A.M. to 6 P.M. daily, seven days a week.

Strolling

The Village of Mystic itself is a pleasant collection of clean, white-painted 19th-century buildings at the junction of Routes 1 and 27. Almost anyone who ventures this far away from the main tourist attractions spends a few minutes walking Main Street and the side streets, which are lined with pleasant old New England homes and attractive shops.

From there the usual route takes one to the Mystic River Drawbridge, which opens every hour at quarter past the hour to allow the yachts and fishing boats to pass underneath.

After the bridge goes down again, the way is clear for a 15-minute walking tour of the west bank of the Mystic River, a section that contains 40 or more well-preserved 19th-century Cape Cod and Greek revival mansions built by ship captains and whale-oil millionaires during the village's heyday. A map and suggested route are available at the Mystic Chamber of Commerce tourist office. (203) 536-1641. It is located in the Olde Mystic Village development. The office is open seven days a week throughout the year and provides visitors with maps and advice.

One of the nation's most curious Colonial restorations is the Denison Homestead on Pequotsepos Road near Mistuxet Avenue off Route 27. Built in 1717 and occupied by the Dension family for 11 generations, the mansion has been restored so that each room reflects a different period of occupancy: There is a Colonial Kitchen, a Revolutionary War bedroom, a Federal parlor, a Civil War bedroom and a 1942 living room. Open at this time of year by appointment only (203) 536-9248.

Across the road, and still on the original Denison land grant, is the Denison-Pequotsepos Nature Center, a 125-acre preserve with five miles of hiking trails, and films, lectures and live nature exhibits. It is open weekdays from 9 A.M. to 5 P.M., Sundays from 1 P.M. to 5 P.M. Adults 75 cents, children 6 to 17 years, 40 cents.

Also open to the public is the Whitehall Mansion (203) 536-9248 at Route 27 near the Turnpike exit. A 1770 farmhouse containing fine antiques, it is the headquarters of the Mystic Historical Society.

How to Get There

Mystic is a straight and simple run of 135 miles from the New York City line on the Connecticut Turnpike (Interstate 95), a trip that takes between two and a half and three hours by car at the posted 55 mile-per-hour speed limit. The State Police are vigilant when it comes to speeders, and prudence is advised.

Use the "Route 27-Mystic" exit about seven miles east of New London. Head south on Route 27. Most of the major tourist attractions are within yards of the exit ramp. The center of Mystic itself is further south, clustered around the junction of Route 27 and the Boston Post Road (United States 1).

AMTRAK trains out of Penn Station (736-4545) stop in downtown Mystic three times a day on their way to Boston. The 9:10 A.M. train arrives at 12:02 P.M., the 5:10 P.M. train arrives at 7:56 P.M. and the 3:10 A.M. arrives at 6:15 A.M. Coach fare one-way is $9.50 and first class is $15.75.

Greyhound buses leave the Eighth Avenue terminal (594-2000) for Mystic once a day at 7:30 A.M. and arrive at 11:33 A.M. The one-way fare is $9.50.

Celebrating Meier's Pristine White Houses

By PAUL GOLDBERGER

It was only a few years ago that architects of Richard Meier's generation—he was born in 1934—were considered the daring new faces on the architectural scene. Mr. Meier's pristine white houses began to dot the suburban and oceanside landscapes around New York in the mid-1960's, and for all of their allusions to Le Corbusier, they were dramatically fresh forms.

Now, a decade after the completion of his Smith House in Darien, Conn., a box of white-painted wood and glass beside the Long Island Sound that became one of the most-photographed houses of the 60's, Mr. Meier seems to have ascended to the role of old master. Oxford University Press has just published an elaborate and handsome volume documenting his work, and an exhibition on his architecture has just opened at Cooper Union, Third Avenue and East Seventh Street, where it will be on display in the Arthur Houghton Gallery Monday through Friday from 2 to 7 P.M. until Nov. 12.

The exhibition is an important event for every observer of New York architecture, in spite of the fact that it offers little in the way of documentation, explanation, or background about specific buildings. It is an attempt to communicate an attitude toward architecture, and it does so as eloquently as anything that is not actually a building could hope to.

The exhibition consists almost exclusively of 15 models of Mr. Meier's work, placed carefully around the generous space of the gallery on elegant pedestals of varying heights. The pages of Mr. Meier's new book line one wall as the only text; the architect's superb collages, which John Hejduk has called "his midnight boxing ring—it keeps the hand and the eye trained," line another wall as a delicate counterpoint to the architecture.

An important event for every observer of New York architecture.

The care with which the models and accompanying wall pieces have been installed by Mr. Meier is not merely an echo of his architectural style; in a sense, it is the very basis of the display. In other words, it is through the design of the show itself that Mr. Meier's attitude toward architecture is explained. The medium—the exhibit arranged as a perfect composition—is a great deal of the message.

For Mr. Meier's architecture is very much an architecture of composition, of parts pieced together with as fine a pure design hand as exists today. It is not an architecture that restricts itself to any single historical precedent or theoretical approach, for all of its connections to Le Corbusier; Mr. Meier deals with space and notions of enclosure and organization in ways that are very much his own. But they are ways that emerge from his desire to create beautiful objects before he creates theories.

If anything is wrong with this display, however, it is that its reliance on models tends to emphasize the object nature of Mr. Meier's work more than is fair. In allowing the form of the exhibition to be so m[illegible] the pure, pristine white [illegible] Meier has underscored tend[illegible] his work is beginning to [illegible] from. For example, the form[illegible] hibit does not do justice to [illegible] almost-finished Bronx Dev[illegible] Center, a state facility for t[illegible] ill that is not only his most [illegible] large-scale work, but a seri[illegible] to innovate technological[illegible] building that exhibits deep [illegible] cern as well.

Compelling Models of House[illegible]

On the other hand, seve[illegible] architect's houses—most n[illegible] recent Shamberg residence [illegible] qua, N.Y., and an unbuilt [illegible] Pound Ridge, N.Y.—are inde[illegible] ling in model form, their su[illegible] or spaces and dramatic t[illegible] tween openness and enclos[illegible] communicated. But while [illegible] white model may get acros[illegible] of a pretty white house, it c[illegible] vey the message of a major [illegible] plex.

more likely two, but when the time comes to move it to a bigger pot, take drainage into account and provide plenty of it.

Lacking the tidal action it would receive at the ocean's edge, a palm in a pot needs a slightly different soil from that found in its natural habitat. A good one for most varieties can be made by mixing equal parts of heavy loam, coarse sand and peat moss, adding a cupful or two of a most unbeach-like article—dried cow manure. The manure is not absolutely necessary, but it is a good means of adding extra nutrients to the soil. If you must use chemical fertilizers, wait at least two months after repotting.

Unlike the procedure for most house plants, you should not remove any of the old soil from the root ball of a palm when repotting. The roots are the touchiest part of a palm, so you want to leave them as undisturbed as possible. If the old soil is packed really hard, then try to match the firmness when filling in the new potting mix around the edges. Otherwise, the roots will tend to remain twined in the old because they really aren't, there's one more thing to remember about their roots. As long as drainage is good, it is better to err in the direction of overwatering than underwatering. For palms, dry roots mean dead roots.

Above ground, palms are so resilient and strong as to outlast most of their plastic counterfeits. Environmentally, they belong to a botanical group known as pyrophytes, plants that tend to benefit from the normally destructive forces of fire. A palm's trunk is not dependent on the continuous growth of an outer bark in the way we normally think of trees, so they often survive devastating tropical forest fires and do better than ever once the plant competition beneath them has been seared away.

The reason the outer layer of a palm trunk does not play the vital role in the plant's growth and survival that bark does with our temperate-zone trees is that palms are in a sense giant-size grasses. Morphologically, they are related to lilies by their flower structure; and like the common lawn grass, they are monocots, that is, they have a single seed leaf. At first glance this might not seem important; palm seeds may take more than a year to germinate, and then are very slow growers, so most of us purchase established plants, with at least a frond or two already waving. But the fact explains another important point in palm care: As much as you may pinch back your other house plants to make them bushy and lush, if you try it with your palm, goodbye palm. Monocots have only one growing point, the terminal bud. Remove that and the plant dies. One can, of course, cut off dead leaves and otherwise prune damaged foliage, but never the growing center from which these emerge.

Palms, I've found, are almost bug-proof under indoor cultivation. Red ball. It's almost as if they refuse to take the easy way out.

Now, not to make palms sound fussy, spider mites, mealy bugs and scale may make a rare foray into your palm grove, but they won't stay long and are easily removed from the plant's stiff and tolerant fronds. Those perennial house-plant pests, the aphids, don't even try to sink their teeth into a palm's tough leaves.

Tough as they are, these leaves will tend to bleach out with too much sun. Palms are slow growers; yet indoors it's often desirable to slow their growth even more by limiting the amount of light they receive to a bright but dappled shade. Palms as a whole tolerate shade quite gracefully. They will thrive on anything from an hour or so of direct sunlight to nothing but a day's worth of fluorescent lighting in an inner office three halls down from the nearest window. By limiting the amount of direct sunlight to which they are exposed, you'll have slightly smaller plants, but they will be more fully developed and a richer, lusher green.

What may be harder to limit than the sunshine is the number of potted palms you acquire after that first one. And once you've acquired half a dozen, you may well want to join the Palm Society in order to receive its quarterly journal Principes and to have access to its seed bank when you're in search of new specimens for your collection. The society's address is 1320 South Venetian Way, Miami 33139.

Unusual palms and palm seeds can be obtained from: Dial M. Dunkin, Box 2186, Harlingen, Tex. 78550, price list, $1; the Exotica Seed Company, 820 South Lorraine Boulevard, Los Angeles, 90005, catalogue, 50 cents, and Hurov's Tropical Seeds, P.O. Box 10387C, Honolulu, free list.

Palms for the Parlor, Office and Patio

Chamaedorea elegans (parlor palm). The dark green feathery leaves of this dwarf palm, which rarely exceeds two feet in height, are a decorator's standard. It is one of the few palms that flower regularly indoors—but the whole inflorescence looks like little more than a bunch of diminutive green lentils. Parlor palms are usually grown several to a pot for lushness. They like a warm climate (average 75 degrees) and low light.

The genus Chamaedorea also includes a host of other palms, such as costaricana and erumpens, collectively sold under the popular name bamboo palm because of their bamboolike stems. Both these bamboo palms are quite tolerant of cold and will do well in air-conditioned offices once they're a foot or so tall.

Chamaerops humilis (European or Mediterranean fan palm). Originating in Spain and Morocco, this is the only palm native to Europe. Dwarf in habit when cultivated indoors, it rarely exceeds four feet. Although it needs a little more light than some of the other palms, say two hours of sun a day, it is also one of the hardiest. It can be cultivated in the garden as far north as the Carolinas on the East Coast, and it makes a splendid addition to the summer terrace in New York if there's room for it to winter indoors.

Chrysalidocarpus lutescens (areca palm, yellow butterfly palm). The feathery yellowish foliage hiding most of the stems give this plant a lushness that will help turn any bathroom into a private Tahitian mountain pool. The palm needs both warmth and moisture, which is another reason to incorporate it into the décor of the tub area.

Phoenix roebelinii (pygmy date palm). Here is one of the most graceful and tropical-looking of the readily available indoor palms. It is a slow grower, however, so get one about the size you'd like it to be three years from now. This palm does not like drafts, but although it generally likes things on the warm side, it will tolerate air-conditioning.

Pop Music: Diffident Ry Cooder

Through his records (the latest is called "Chicken Skin Music") and his concerts (he opened a two-night run at the Bottom Line Wednesday), Ry Cooder has established himself as one of our most charming guitarists and musical collectors.

His virtues are considerable. No matter what kind of guitar he plays, from conventional acoustic to bottleneck to slide to electric to several more, he conveys an infectious relish in the sounds and styles he can evoke—and he has more than enough technique to communicate that relish. His ear for quirky musical byways seems close to infallible, too. Mr. Cooder has a way of dusting off some seemingly musty old polka or Hawaiian lullaby and suddenly making it seem fresh as new. And his band and backup singers Wednesday supported him ebulliently through every shift of idiom and mood.

But there are troubles, as well, and they have so far prevented him from being more than a cult object, a much-glorified studio musician who might be better off contributing his talents to other artists. And particularly to better singers. Mr. Cooder's biggest problem is his totally uninteresting singing voice. Coupled with that is his hesitant stage manner. Diffidence can be appealing in a performer if the musical gifts are so gripping as to override them. But along with Mr. Cooder's retiring voice, a retiring personality is only an added burden.

I Was a Halloween Gypsy

By JOYCE MAYNARD

It's not the taste of candy corn and Milky Way bars I remember when I think about the Halloweens of my childhood. It's the taste of lipstick. The years I went trick-or-treating as a gypsy fortune teller, my mother gave me a gold earring and sprayed Evening in Paris behind my ears and painted my mouth red. All night I kept kissing the back of my hand to make sure the color was still there. I wore a long skirt and a silk bandana and a chain of pop beads. I was surprised when people answered their doors and they still seemed to recognize me.

This longing to look different runs deep. I don't think it necessarily suggests a dissatisfaction with one's given face or one's regular clothes. Dressing differently is simply a way of transforming one's self, briefly into a different person—and not only being viewed differently by other people, but by one's self too. The things a person is likely to say, and even the way she moves, with red lipstick on, or false eyelashes, or a gypsy dress or a floor-length black cape, will not be the same as if that person were dressed in a khaki jump suit or heavy work boots.

All my life, at any rate, I have loved dressing up. I try on clothes I can't afford, or would never buy. I spent an hour once in a wig department, watching myself go from long hair to short hair to bouffant to curls. Sometimes I even visit optometrist's offices, to try on eyeglass frames.

A while back, a department store here evidently found itself with a surplus of eyeshadow samples, and ran an ad to the effect that anyone who purchased a certain quantity of a particular kind of makeup could then buy, for a very reasonable additional price, a seventy-four-color pallette of eyeshadow colors ranging from fairly pedestrian shades of blue and green to gold and orange and purple and hot pink.

Seventy-four colors. Is it necessary to say—is there any doubt at all?—that two hours after reading that ad, I was the owner of a bagful of cosmetics I would never use, and so many different colors of powdered eyeshadow that I could paint my lids orchid rose on the Fourth of July, and a different color every day thereafter, without finding myself back to orchid rose until after Labor Day? The fact that I almost never wear eyeshadow during the day, and venture into nothing riskier than brown or gray, after sunset, mattered almost not at all, in my split-second deliberations over this purchase. Every once in a while, at 2 A.M., it is interesting to see what one might look like with gold eyelids.

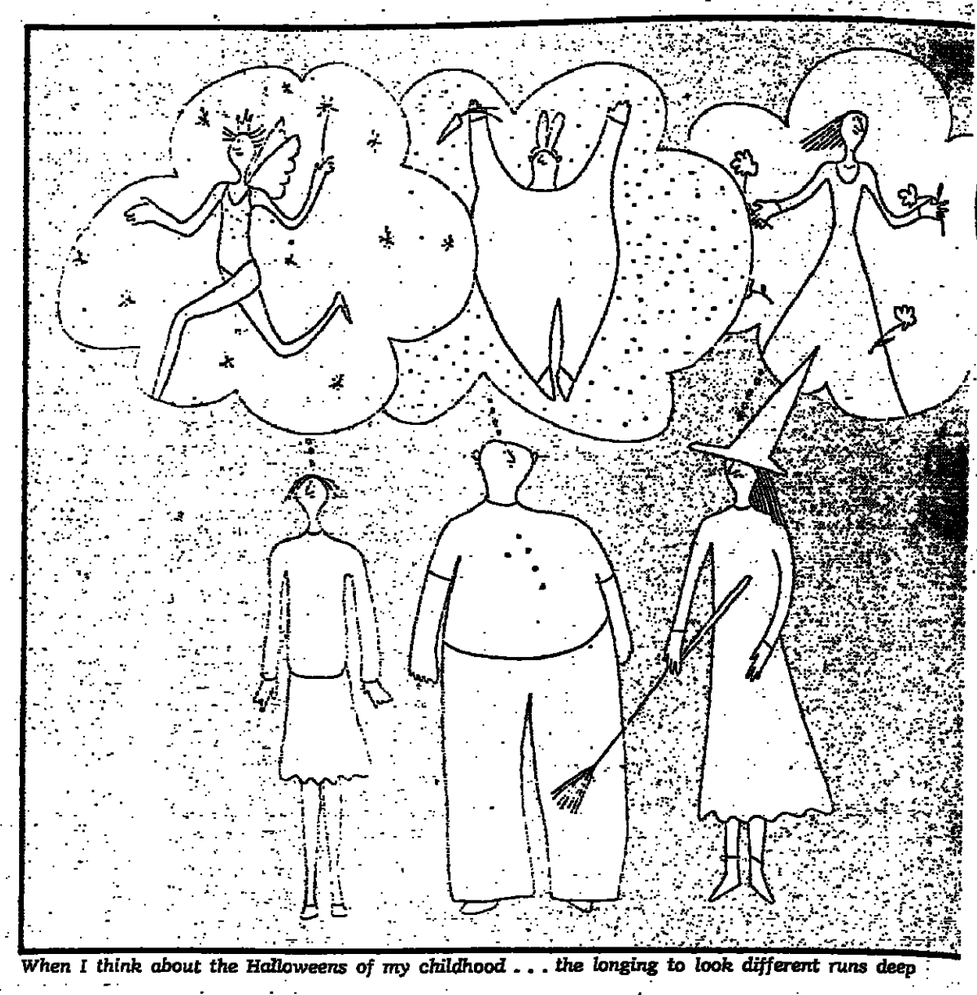
"This will be useful," I told myself—ever practical—"for when I get invited to a costume party or for Halloween" (or for the next 129 Halloween parties of my life).

But the truth is, I've only attended one Halloween party in my life, and that memory is not so tender. I had been preparing for this occasion for years, it seemed, so the decision of what to wear, which of my filed-away, rummage-sale-acquired, beaded antique gowns and feather boas to take out of the closet, was a pretty wrenching one. Finally, though, I decided to go as a fairy, in a bathing suit with sequins sewn on and a rhinestone tiara and a pair of Saran Wrap wings.

It was a bitterly cold night, and the party was held in a house some distance out in the country. I drove there with a friend, who came late to pick me up and (because she'd driven straight from work) wore no costume. We arrived at the party just before midnight—my friend in a skirt and sweater and me, shivering in pink tights, holding my wand. The music was very loud, and a lot of people appeared to be drunk or stoned. A few guests were dancing, and a few black eye-masks and plastic noses were scattered on the floor. Everyone in the room was wearing sweaters and blue jeans.

Since then, costume party invitations have not been forthcoming, which may be just as well. Somewhere in Soho, Sunday night, Andy Warhol may be draped in silver lamé. Mick Jagger may be zipping up a devil suit, and probably a few dozen New Yorkers, this election year, will put in appearances as Mr. Peanut—each one congratulating himself on coming up with such an original notion.

But it seems that most people over 20 dress no differently now, on Halloween, from the way they might have dressed a week ago last Tuesday. There is such a fear of looking foolish, seeming silly. Better to seem dull. As for me, I am content to answer the doorbell, dressed only as myself, handing out candy corn and Milky Way bars to Fruit-of-the-Loom ghosts and four-foot-tall, plastic-masked Mickey Mice and Six-Million-Dollar-Men. My gypsy days are over.



When I think about the Halloweens of my childhood . . . the longing to look different runs deep

Learning to Read Through Art

By RICHARD FLASTE

If you're striding up the ramp at the Guggenheim Museum this weekend—moving familiarly past the stark bays that house those old friends, Hofmann, Albers and Rothko—you're likely to break stride just as you reach the fifth ramp, where the museum has abruptly changed pace.

There, where the Seurat, Kandinsky and Picasso hung only a few days ago, are the likes of Chapman, Hodgson, Ensley and Booker. Who are these people, anyway? And what are they trying to prove?

School children, actually. And they have a good deal less to prove than the people who saw to it that the youngsters' works were hung at the museum.

For this, art's burden is that in addition to its being art for its own sake, it is art for some other sakes as well. It is the product of a program in which educators have attempted to show that, through art, children can learn reading and other traditional subjects, such as science.

A Difficult Goal Is Met

And if that pedagogic goal weren't difficult enough, it is obviously the museum's objective, as it teams with the educators, to demonstrate that the art so created is worth looking at, even by people who come to the Guggenheim expecting to see nothing more naïve than a Rousseau.

Evidently the museumgoers do like it, because the museum keeps bringing the Learning to Read Through the Arts Program back. Although the artists keep changing, this is the sixth consecutive year for the show called "A Year With Children," which runs through Nov. 14. The Guggenheim's hours are 11 to 5, Wednesday through Sunday, with a general admission of $1, and students and the elderly admitted for 50 cents. Telephone 860-1300 for further information.

The paintings (although other media are in evidence, the show is predominently paintings) were not chosen as part of a competition. Every one of the 260 kindergarten through ninth-grade students in the program is represented in some way in the show—many of these children have already had all the lessons in rejection they can stand.

The show is full of fine self-images. Two of them belong to Tros W. Booker, an 11-year-old from Public School 28 in Manhattan. He sees himself as a life-size football player carrying a cane that he has drawn tentatively, as if he couldn't make up his mind on whether football injuries were good or bad.

The New York Times/Carl T. Gossett

Tyrone W. Booker's painting, part of the Guggenheim Museum's exhibition of art by school children.

Nearby is a self-portrait of Reynard Ensley, 12, from P.S. 111 in the Bronx, where—if his notion of himself is truly shown—he is one of the coolest customers in the whole sixth grade, having painted himself as lithe as a rubber man. Besides being cool, he incontestably has talent.

So does Oscar Hodgson, a seventh-grader from I.S. 10 in Manhattan, who draws a head with strong lines and a sense for abstract forms. Alice Chapman, 10, from P.S. 116 remembers her museum field trips well, and has depicted Gauguinesque nudes.

The work of these youngsters differs from that of the children from Roosevelt Island, who were given the task of relating their paintings to technology. Some of the most rivetting works were derived from looking at magnetc fields as they were represented by metal filings pulled by magnets, and then the children painted them, using the tension of complementary colors. Rickey Garvin, 13, did the magnetic field painting that was chosen as the poster for this year's exhibition.

Advancement in Reading

But, you ask, do the children learn to read? Bernadette O'Brien, a reading teacher who has worked closely with this program, asserts that they do.

The reason is that while learning to create art, they are also learning the vocabulary that goes with it: they read about the tools and about other artists. They keep a journal describing what they did and where they went.

Moreover, through painting they have the salutary experience of seeing themselves as successful, creative people, witnessing what the museum—and you—think of them.

If, for instance, you stop at Reynard Ensley's painting this weekend and you happen to utter some admiring words about it. And at the same time there's a slender boy of about 12 inconspicuously eavesdropping, there certainly will be at least two people in the Guggenheim Museum who, at that moment, are filled with admiration for Reynard Ensley.

Inside Occult New York

This Sunday is Halloween, All Hallows Eve, the ancient Celtic Samhain, when the portals gaped wide between this world and the otherworld, freeing spirits to do mischief; the night, in effect, that all hell broke loose. It is the season when, according to folk legend, unsuspecting mortals were rapt away by demon lovers to a place where seven years pass as swiftly as if they were seven days.

Today, Halloween is notable chiefly as an occasion for children to go masquerading from door to door in quest of treats or, for those whose taste runs to tricks, to daub soap or spray shaving cream on automobile windows or one another. The memory that these activities are a form of therapeutic magic to ward off the hobgoblins loose on this night—in part by imitating them—has grown dim.

Still, even in these enlightened times, among many who are searching restlessly for new faiths, there are some—dabblers in white magic, witches in blue jeans, amateur astrologers, experimenters in the occult—who are willing to look seriously at the old beliefs. In New York they form a kind of underground, catered to by dimly lighted shops that purvey amulets and talismans, herbs reputed to have special properties; books of ancient, secret lore. This may be an auspicious weekend to explore some of these byways of occult New York.

One caveat: The people in these shops take the occult seriously. They welcome those with a desire to understand the subject's mysteries. However, they maintain, to approach the occult as superstition will result in your taking from it no more than you brought to it.

Magickal Childe

As you walk into The Magickal Childe, formerly the Warlock Shop, at 35 West 19th Street, you will be met by the sight of long hooded caftans and flowing robes suspended from the walls by wires. Down the right-hand side of the store stretches a wall of shelves about eight feet high, full of herbs and spices with such exotic names as deer's tongue ($1.55 a quarter-pound) and lotus root ($5 a quarter-pound). The herbs can be used as teas and for medicinal purposes. Some, says Clinton, the shop's herb specialist, are capable of curing or relieving discomfort from ailments as diverse as athlete's foot and the common cold.

Clinton, who is originally from New Orleans, is initiated into the rites of demonology. Diane—who says, "Most witches prefer not to be called by their last name"—is another attendant at the store. She can explain what the amulets and talismans enclosed in a metal and glass case mean. Most of them are for good luck and protection, some for love and others for obtaining money. Diane said, making the shelves of the amulet case revolve by pushing a button on its top right corner.

On Sundays at 2 P.M. The Magickal Childe holds free lectures on occult topics. "The shop is really full then," said Clinton.

The shop is open Monday through Saturday, noon to 8 P.M., and Sunday from noon to 6. Telephone: 242-7182.

Mason's Bookstore

Zoltan Mason, proprietor of Mason's Bookstore, up a flight of stairs at 789 Lexington Avenue, between 61st and 62d Streets, has been in the business of astrology and the occult for over 25 years. He first became interested while studying to become a psychiatrist at Charles University of Prague.

When asked for a definition of astrology, Mr. Mason simply quotes Ptolemy, the second-century Greco-Egyptian astronomer and geographer, who called it a "natural science based on observation." He scoffs at those who consider astrology a divine science. "That sounds like charlatanism," he says. Rather, he believes astrology should be viewed as "a serious source for information that should be used together with other knowledges."

For $35, Mr. Mason will do your astrological chart. And he will explain its meaning in a one-hour session. What kind of people come to him to have charts made? "People who want to know themselves," replies Mr. Mason.

Pop Music: A Marcovicci Without Guitar

Before Andrea Marcovicci gained her current renown playing opposite Woody Allen in "The Front" she was, among other things, a nightclub singer with a rather folkish outlook who played her own guitar and piano accompaniment. She has picked up that career again at Reno Sweeney where the folk quality has been replaced by a mixture of old standards and contemporary pop songs and her accompaniment is provided by a tightly organized quartet led from the piano by Lewis Friedman.

This has freed her to be a standup singer, which is all to the good because Miss Marcovicci is a striking-looking woman, with strong, classic features who moves with easy grace as she sings. Her voice, which sometimes seemed too well developed for her folk material, has now been brought into proper balance to encompass songs as far apart as David Bowie's "Life on Mars" and Kurt Weill's "My Ship." She is a sensitive singer who effectively underplays Irving Berlin's "Cheek to Cheek" to emphasize the delicate nuances of the melody or opens up in a broad, emotional display on "You Don't Know Me." But, although she projects the rolling, semi-recitative lines of her own song, "Lost Angeles," with feeling and flourish, she is unable to get a handle on the genial patter of Noël Coward's "Louisa, the Movie Queen."

Miss Marcovicci has everything going for her—appearance, voice, presentation. Her only problem is that [illegible] is the burden of an [illegible] a clown who [illegible] talent into [illegible] finale featuring tap dancing skeletons, magicians and jugglers.

The parade once again is directed by Ralph Lee, a theater artist who received a 1975 Obie award for last year's spectacle. Mr. Lee has constructed hundreds of arty masks for the parade, plus several giant figures—a two-headed beast, a seven-foot lobster and a 40-foot green snake.

The parade route is as follows: From Westbeth to Abingdon Square by way of Jane Street; along Bleecker to Charles Street; across Seventh Avenue to Waverly Place; across the Avenue of the Americas and east on West Fourth Street to Washington Square. Children are invited to join the parade anywhere along the route.

The parade, which is being sponsored in part by a $4,000 grant from the National Endowment for the Arts, with participation by the city's Department of Cultural Affairs, will have some "surprise events" along the route.

Witches in Abingdon Sq.

A coven of witches will stir up trouble in Abingdon Square. Strange hecklers will hang out on fire escapes along Bleecker Street. And the forces of good and evil will confront each other on the steps of the Washington Square Methodist Church. No one knows yet which will win, but the smart money is on the forces of good.

After Sunday's parade, revelers are invited to ease on over to the "first annual" Village Halloween Ball, which will take place indoors and outdoors on Jane Street between West and Washington Streets, beginning at 9 P.M.

There will be dancing in the streets to three bands, bobbing for apples, horror films, food, beer and "monstrous [illegible] openings."

The ball is sponsored by Theater for [illegible] City, and tickets are $5 each, [illegible] those who are unemployed. A [illegible] judges, including Rosalyn [illegible] Arthur Cohen, will award prizes to the costumes they consider the strangest, the funniest, the scariest and the most uptown. "Uptown," it was explained, refers to anyone who lives north of 14th Street, or looks as if he or she shops at Bloomingdale's.

A Good Season for Shops

There are indications that New Yorkers are taking this Halloween seriously. A spot check of toy and variety stores showed that candy, costumes, party favors and decorations were selling briskly, "better than last year," one salesman said.

The best-selling costumes? At Rappaport's Toy Bazaar, it's the pointy-eared Mr. Spock from television's "Star Trek." At F. A. O. Schwarz, it's the Spanish girl and the pirate. And at several variety stores, it is television's Six-Million-Dollar Man, as well as the traditional skeleton, devil and witch costumes.

Meanwhile, back to the Village. Other events there this weekend include a Halloween Harvest Fair, sponsored by the Waverly Block Association from 11 A.M. to 5 P.M. tomorrow on Waverly Place between the Avenue of the Americas and Grove Street. In case of rain, the fair will be Sunday.

The sponsors of the event say that "pumpkins" is the password of the fair, which means that many of them will be for sale in various forms — painted, plain, cooked and baked. There will also be amusements, crafts, antiques, games and live music, not to mention Coach House quiche. All proceeds go for street beautification.

Pumpkin Fest at School

Something called "The Great Pumpkin Fest" will be held at the Village Community School, at 272 West 10th Street, tomorrow from 10 A.M. to 4 P.M. Once again, pumpkins will be the stars of the show, with minor roles taken by a quilting bee, a "spook house," Halloween mask making, fortune-telling and a costume parade. As a bonus for hard-pressed parents, used children's clothing, as well as ice skates and toys, will be sold.

A few blocks away, the Jack and Jill Nursery School, at 207 East 16th Street, is having a Halloween costume party tomorrow from 1:30 to 3:30 P.M. There will be games, prizes, candy bags and free refreshments along with entertainment.

Joyce London, president of the school's parent's association, said the party was recommended for 3-to-8-year-olds, and that the $1:50 admission for children and $1 for adults is tax deductible. That always helps.

There are creepy things going on in other parts of the city, too. At 2 P.M. on Sunday, the public is invited to take part in "pagan ceremonies" at The Magickal Childe, an occult shop at 35 West 19th Street run by a witch named Herman Slater. Several other witches will be there, too.

Morris-Jumel Puppet Show

A free Halloween puppet show called "We Were All Here," written and produced by children, will be performed at 2:30 P.M. on Sunday at the Morris-Jumel Mansion, Manhattan's oldest residence, Edgecombe Avenue and West 160th Street. Refreshments include herbal teas and cider.

Rebecca, a mime artist who studied with Marcel Marceau, will be the featured attraction at a Halloween party at 2 P.M. on Sunday at the Children's Museum, 15 Beach Street in the Stapleton section of Staten Island. Children are invited to come in costume for the party, which includes refreshments, bobbing for apples and ghost stories. Reservations are a must, and the telephone number is 273-2060.

At noon Sunday, what is billed as "the world's largest pumpkin" goes on display in front of Tavern on the Green in Central Park, with a witch at its side. The pumpkin, which weighs 451 pounds and is four feet wide and three feet high, won the "world's largest pumpkin contest" this month in Churchville, Pa.

The pumpkin will be on display until 3 P.M., and then, rather than being cut up for pies or turned into a princess, it will be returned to the Robert Ford nurseries in Coatesville, Pa., so that its seeds can be used in developing more great pumpkins.

In the suburbs, Halloween gets under way tonight between 7 and 8 P.M. when the Greenburgh Nature Center on Dromore Road in Scarsdale, holds a Halloween night nature walk for families.

Children and adults will be taken on a guided walk through the center's trails, listening and watching for "night sights and sounds." Afterward, refreshments will be served in the main building.

And if that isn't scary enough, families can drive over to New Rochelle, where the Wildcliff Museum is offering its annual "Haunted House" for children 5 to 14 years old.

The event, which outgrew the museum this year, will be held instead in the eerie cellar of the South Side Boys Club, on Weyman Avenue in New Rochelle. It is open from 5 to 8 P.M. tonight through Sunday.

"All the usual features are there," said Carol Garrity, the museum's administrator, "witches, crawling snakes, cobwebs, and mazes, plus a huge abandoned furnace that the children can crawl through."

Despite all the planned Halloween events, most children will probably celebrate simply by going trick or treating, which in the city means going from floor to floor in one's apartment building, and in the suburbs means going from house to house with parents or friends.

And, once again, children and their parents should be warned that there are some real-life ghouls out there—sick people who fill children's trick-or-treat baskets with apples containing razor blades, cookies baked with ground glass and candy coated with rat poison.

"Unfortunately, trick or treating is no longer a harmless, childhood activity," said Elinor Guggenheimer, the city's Commissioner of Consumer Affairs. "If you are the least bit suspicious about any item your child has been given—if it looks peculiar or smells funny—get rid of it immediately."

Publishing: An Album of Hard Times

By THOMAS LASK

ONE of the big books of St. Martin's Press for the fall is "A Vision Shared," a compilation of photographs from the work of eleven photographers of the Farm Security Administration. The book covers the period 1935-1943 and reflects the Diaghilev-like guidance of Roy Stryker, not a photographer himself, but the motivating force behind the men and women who produced an unparalleled record of our country during those years. Through visual images they conveyed the texture, the artifacts, the life style of predominantly rural Americans, many of whom lived in conditions of squalor difficult to believe. That they were believed was due to the skill, the viewpoint and sustained passion of the people who took these photographs.

For the first time now, says Hank O'Neal, editor of the volume, representative work of the eleven photographers has been gathered in a single book, with selections of pictures that they wanted, printed as they wanted, and with a text of which they approved. In the case of two who had died, Ben Shahn and Dorothea Lange, Shahn's widow Bernarda and Paul S. Taylor, the husband of Miss Lange, acted as surrogates.

The name of Ben Shahn in the list as a photographer may surprise those who know him only as a painter. Shahn had become interested in photography in the early 1930's although at first he saw the medium as a kind of sketchbook, as a way of accumulating images to be used later in his painting. But he soon came to think of the photograph as a social document, and contributed 6,000 negatives to the farm agency's files.

Mr. O'Neal, the man behind this three-year effort, is a 36-year-old native of Texas, a jazz and modern-dance enthusiast (he manages the Laura Forman company), a writer (he's still at work on his first novel), a sound engineer and a teacher of audio engineering at the New School, and the head of his own recording company, Chiaroscuro.

How did Mr. O'Neal, for whom the Federal agency must have been history, become involved with the subject?

Mr. O'Neal answered the question by asking one of his own. Had the reporter ever visited the Print and Photographic Division of the Library of Congress. "All you have to do is go and you'll never ask the question."

A number in the back of a photograph led him to the Library in the first place. He had been to the Walker Evans show at the Museum of Modern Art and been taken by a picture that he saw later elsewhere at a fraction of the price being asked at the Modern. Curious, he discovered a number on the back of the second photo and learned that it was a Library of Congress file number. The Evans print was in the farm agency file, and Mr. O'Neal was overwhelmed by the riches he found there.

"It builds and builds," he said of the effect of merely looking, "and 200,000 have not even been printed. One of the finest things you can get out of Washington."

It was then he decided to learn more about the people who took the photos: John Collier, Jack Delano, Theo Jung, Russell Lee, Carl Mydans, Arthur Rothstein, Marion Post Wolcott and John Vachon, in addition to the other three photographers.

"It was not easy," he remarked. "They were scattered from Vienna to Singapore. But one led to the others. I wanted it to be a photographer's book and I hoped they would not use the photographs used all the time. But I wanted them to pick out the ones they liked. I wrote the biographical essays; they had the total liberty to change what they wanted."

"They are the best bunch of people," he summed up, "or they wouldn't have been able to do what they did".

Miss Lange, who died in 1965, will be receiving even more exposure than she is accorded in "A Vision Shared." For she is the subject of an as-yet-untitled biography by Milton Meltzer, whose books for young people and their elders take up a column in "Books in Print."

Mr. Meltzer, who has finished his research ("I have miles on miles of 3 by 5 cards") but has yet to put down a word on paper, took time out in his West Side apartment to talk about the biography. "I'm trying something relatively new," he said, "to write a full-scale life of a photographer as an artist."

Hitherto, he indicated, books about photographers have been collections of photos with supportive text aimed at the pictures rather than at the person who took them. His book will contain a large number of photos, but it will not be an album. The pictures will be not so much by Miss Lange, as of her, and even those by her will be there to illustrate a point in the text.

There is no lack of material, Mr. Meltzer added. Miss Lange had taped an oral history at Berkeley. He has interviewed more than 80 persons: children, grandchildren, professional photographers who knew her and the apprentices she used to take on for a year. Cooperating in all this is Miss Lange's husband, who suggested that Mr. Meltzer write her life after he read an essay by him on Miss Lange.

"She was not a predictable woman or someone who simply fell into a mold," Mr. Meltzer said. "Things turned up that surprised me and will surprise the reader."

He hopes to deliver the completed manuscript to Farrar, Straus & Giroux sometime in the spring of 1978.

Along with "Picasso's Mask," the third installment in André Malraux's lengthy autobiography, Holt, Rinehart and Winston are also publishing a new translation by Stephen Becker of "The Conquerors," Malraux's second novel, set in China and Indochina in the 1920's, then, as later, a time of upheaval. The work is based on the author's own experiences in China in that decade.

Is Holt starting a wholesale reissue of Malraux's novels? No, said a spokesman. It simply occurred to the publisher that the translation of "The Conquerors" was outdated, that Mr. Becker, who had written his own novel of China, was available and that it was wise to strike while the iron was hot. Thus, the next Malraux title for Holt will be the fourth segment of the autobiography, due in the fall of 1977, which has been described as speculations on life and death.

In his review of "The Marquise of O . . .," one of the superior films shown at the just-completed New York Film Festival, Vincent Canby wrote that the director Erich Rohmer had followed the story by the nineteenth century German Heinrich von Kleist "as if it were a screenplay"—not a bad accolade for a writer who flourished before the term "screenwriter" was invented. The Frederick Ungar Publishing Company writes to say that filmgoers who want to compare the original with the picture can get hold of the text in English in both hardbound ($8.50) and paperback ($3.25). As a bonus, the edition features a preface by Thomas Mann.

'Jonah,' Drama of Guilt, At Jewish Theater

The Jewish Repertory Theater's second production of its third season will be "Jonah," a drama dealing with the collective guilt after World War II that was written in 1947 by Günter Rutenborn, a former pastor of a small parish near Berlin. Under the title of "The Sign of Jonah," the play was presented in 1960 at the Players Theater in the Village.

It is being presented on Thursdays, Saturdays at 8 P.M. and on Sundays at 2:30 and 8 P.M. at the Emanu-El Midtown Y.M.-Y.W.H.A., 344 East 14th Street, through Nov. 14. The Jewish Repertory Theater is an Off Off Broadway theater dedicated to producing in English plays concerned with the Jewish experience. The adaptation is by George White and will include music by Jeremy Storch and lyrics by Anne Smith.

Bridge: Using 'Automatic Redouble' Could Perplex Opponents

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

For knockout players who like to use a swinging bidding style, the "automatic redouble" is worth considering.

This is an English idea that requires a player who has opened one no-trump to redouble if either opponent doubles him. The redoubler's partner will usually know what to do and the opponents may not.

If the bidding ends, the declaring side has a mathematical advantage: If seven tricks are made, the redouble gains 330 or 530 according to vulnerability, while if the contract is down one, the corresponding loss is 100 or 200.

North-South had a triumph with this exotic device on the diagramed deal from an English knockout event. The opening bid was a weak no-trump, and North decided that there was no game and no reason to prefer a diamond contract. East felt that he was on strong ground in doubling, and was a little unlucky to find his partner with a near-yarborough.

When South's automatic redouble came back to East, he could not tell that North had a good hand and West a terrible one. A retreat would not have helped much, for a contract of two spades could have been doubled and set three tricks for 800 points.

South was always destined to make eight tricks, and against some inadequate defense emerged with 10, in spite of the fact that West's opening spade lead gave the defense a chance of four immediate tricks in the suit.

East chose to win and shift to a low heart. Fairly sure about the heart king but not about the jack, South put in the queen, cashed the ace-queen of diamonds and led the club ten. West made an error by covering, and by the time South had taken the ace in dummy and run three more diamond tricks the position was this:

	NORTH ♠ 10 ♡ 7 ◇ 6 ♣ J 6
WEST ♠ 8 7 6 ♡ 9 6 ◇ — ♣ —		EAST ♠ A K ♡ K J ◇ — ♣ K
	SOUTH ♠ J ♡ A 10 ◇ — ♣ 9 8

When the last diamond was led from dummy, East reluctantly parted with a spade winner. A club was led, and South collected the last two tricks and scored 1,910 points on a part-score deal.

The Grand National Teams contest being held in the Community Reform Temple, 712 The Plain Road, Westbury, L. I., was carried incorrectly in the Wednesday column. The correct dates are the evenings of Nov. 2 and 9.

	NORTH ♠ 10 4 ♡ 7 3 ◇ K J 9 6 4 2 ♣ A J 8
WEST ♠ 8 7 6 3 ♡ 9 6 2 ◇ 10 8 5 ♣ Q 7 2		EAST ♠ A K Q 5 ♡ K J 8 5 ◇ 7 3 ♣ K 5 3
	SOUTH (D) ♠ J 9 2 ♡ A Q 10 4 ◇ A Q ♣ 10 9 8 4

Both sides were vulnerable. The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 N.T.	Pass	Pass	Dbl.
Redbl	Pass	Pass	Pass

West led the spade three.

British Grenadiers' Band Ousts Music Director

LONDON, Oct. 28 (Reuters)—The director of music of the elite Grenadier Guards Regimental Band was dismissed from the forces at a court martial today following a conviction for taking money earned from unauthorized band performances.

Maj. Peter Parkes, 47 years old, was found guilty yesterday of four charges of theft. These concerned keeping fees from private performances by the band. Less than $500 was involved in the charges.

The case spotlighted the soaring demand for British military bands in recording studios and cabaret spots instead of on the parade ground.

Piano Recital: Weissenberg's Icy Intensity

There are people who complain that Alexis Weissenberg is a cold performer, but there is such a thing as icy intensity, and he is its personification among pianists. In a work lit by such cold fire as Liszt's Sonata in B minor, the centerpiece of Mr. Weissenberg's Carnegie Hall recital Wednesday night, the Bulgarian-born virtuoso has few peers.

It was an unusually rapid account, tautly coiled from start to finish. Mr. Weissenberg's fingers disdained the added strain—his stamina is one reason he seems so impersonal—and there was more plasticity to the lyrical passages than his imperious countenance betrayed. He thundered through the final peroration like a man possessed, which is very much what the music calls for.

It is true that there is something one-dimensional about such playing—there are pianists who find more color in the work, and more breadth. And it is true that even the pious moments were satanically transfigured. But no one has yet played Liszt's sonata perfectly, and until someone does, Mr. Weissenberg's account is sufficiently stupendous.

The two other works on Wednesday's program received comparably fleet, driven readings. In Bach's Fourth Partita, Mr. Weissenberg projected a good deal of majesty at the expense of a good deal of contrapuntal detail.

Elizabeth Taylor reminds us, through Amy, how many middle-aged people plod mechanically toward death, how they use their spouse to balance themselves out, how—when that balance is upset—their entire psychic economy is bankrupted. The devastating idea implicit in "Blaming" is that, without a "way of life," such people are lost, that they can no more re-enter the wilderness of random human contact than a zoo-bred lion can return to the bush.

In Amy and Martha, Mrs. Taylor juxtaposes two attitudes toward life in such a way that they seem to mock each other. Martha is a caricature of American nervousness and intrusive curiosity. In Amy's house, she takes up a box of matches, lights them one at a time, and blows them out, as if this was the burning of her own "hard, gem-like flame." She examines her face in Amy's spoons, as if the resulting distortion offered an English view of herself. It is characteristic of Martha that she has bought in Istanbul a large purse and a leather coat, both of which smell terrible.

Here is how Amy sees the novel of Martha's that she has read: "She had not known what to make of that humorless study of sensuality, the desperate foray into a man's—and married man's—world, or, rather a narrow aspect of it. The stresses and despair, and bloody-mindedness." Martha, of course, is both fascinated with and filled with contempt for Amy's lack of curiosity. Does it imply that she is secure beyond incessant inquiry, or resigned to never knowing everything? Are her silences brave or stupid? Is a place like England pregnant enough with history to permit an end to eschatological questions?

For all her venturing, Martha receives the most minimal returns: a marriage to Simon, who proposes on impulse when Martha refuses some rather expensive cakes in a cafe. Martha's one safe gesture turns out to be suicidal: because she cannot live with Simon, she irrationally assumes that she cannot live with anyone else—or without anyone else.

Amy, of course, muddles through in classical English fashion. She marries her dead husband's closest friend, Gareth, thereby coming as close to replacing the man she has lost and regaining her old existence as she possibly can. "What a life before him, Gareth thought, quite contentedly—a life of advising, consoling, sheltering; all of which he could do."

In "Blaming" the late Mrs. Taylor is saying something quite subtle, the sort of thing she is widely admired for, about the relationship between the sexes. When Gareth proposes to her, Amy refuses at first: "Oh, no, Gareth. I should be far too embarrassed." It is this "embarrassment" which finally excites her and induces her to say yes to him. If we are not sophisticated, or desensitized beyond embarrassment, we have enough emotional face to enable us to survive. Or, to put it more simply, where there's embarrassment, there's hope.

The Seventh Power is a dilly of a thriller about the plausibility of making a homemade nuclear bomb. Two Princeton students put the bomb together. Bobby French is black, the son of a judge. Aizy Tate is a poor little rich girl, an oddball but brilliant at nuclear physics. Stoop, Harlem street black, is the third member of the team. His job: steal the necessary supplies. The evil machine is built...Suspense reaches a nearly unbearable pitch as French, Tate and Stoop become, in themselves, the world's seventh nuclear power."

She was a proud, passionate woman who sent three men off to war—for an imperial England that expected never to die...

The Crimea was Victorian England's Vietnam. In its turbulent high tide, Helen Goodchild sent three men off to war: one driven by love, one by hate, and one by that special British sense of honor that had been born on the playing fields of Eton—and was about to die in the bloody misery of Sevastopol and Balaclava.

"Jeal takes his Victorians, proper and improper, and makes of them believable human beings," says the advance review in Publishers Weekly; "neither all good nor all bad, reacting to the pressures of money, society and passion in terms we can understand today. The Crimea battle scenes are devastating in their depiction of the terrible waste of life in this needless war."

But Tim Jeal, already acclaimed as an exceptional biographer, does more than create a vivid panorama of the Victorian world he knows so well. He has written a novel very much for our time—the story of a society at war with itself...of the clash between commerce and culture, military pride and social idealism. And in Helen Goodchild he has given us a woman whose appeal transcends time and place.

Like "The French Lieutenant's Woman," she is a heroine impossible to forget.

DONNA SUMMER'S much-ballyhooed appearance Monday night at Roseland or at least as much as this observer stuck around to see—wasn't all that wonderful. But it did set one to thinking about the evolution of disco.

The show itself was designed to promote Miss Summer's new album, which is just out. Entitled "Four Seasons of Love," it takes that hoary motif and divides into four longish disco numbers. Miss Summer is backed, as ever, by the thumping authority of the "Munich Machine," a selection of those Munich studio musicians so crucial to the disco hits of Miss Summer, Silver Convention and many other top artists of the genre. Over it all Miss Summer pipes hopefully away, her thin, rather nasal soprano punctuated by references to the orgasmic moaning that first won her fame.

Miss Summer has a lot of fans, and/or Casablanca Records and its agents have a lot of promotional clout. Roseland was packed to the point of discomfort by the disco-hip and not-so-hip and costumes abounded in feather, decolletage, boas and chains.

Miss Summer's problems began when one first heard the sound system, which was true to the nasality of her voice and nothing else. There was no solidity to the sound, no bass and no volume. And the players, who came from this city rather than Munich, didn't do a very convincing job of imitating the sound of the records.

Miss Summer herself has a certain leggy charm, and her backup trio, Sunshine (reportedly all winners of a Donna Summer lookalike contest), looked slinkily sexy. But the place was so crowded that it was difficult to see, the sound got worse and worse and when Miss Summer lapsed into a wispy cabaret set, devoid of any disco energy, this listener headed out into the rainy night in pursuit of livelier pleasures.

But the experience did lead to some musings on the direction of disco. As the name implies, in its purest form this is a recorded phenomenon. However, live performances not only satisfy an artist's desire for recognition, but also they make money in themselves, help boost record sales and constitute a curious legitimization of a heretofore vanguard style.

Disco is hardly the first pop music form to follow this progression from recorded dance music to live dance music to music for listening. The old San Francisco "dance concerts" at the Avalon and Fillmore quickly degenerated into the cynically named "festival seating" of today, in which young rock fans are herded onto dance floors and huddle together. Nobody wants much to dance; they're too busy listening or nodding out. But there would be no room to move even if they wanted to.

The same thing happened Monday at Roseland. The announcer asked people at the outset to sit down on the dance floor, and they dutifully did so. And the rest of the evening consisted of some of the best dancers in town packed together, immobile, while Miss Summer tried to establish herself as an "artist" who transcended narrow disco categorization.

One imagines that soon enough the disco artists who survive into broader-based stardom will abandon their reliance on the formulas that have won them their initial success. The process is already in evidence in singers like Candi Staton and Vicki Sue Robinson, and Miss Summer was busy bursting boundaries on Monday.

Disco is, after all a quirky formula that has led to some superior hits, encouraged new clusters of musicians, record companies, stars and fans, and supported a hustling life-style in major urban centers. But its musical elements come from past black and

Donna Summer at her Roseland concert
The commercialization of disco?

Latin styles, and it's only natural that disco artists will want to demonstrate their proficiency and insure their longevity by widening their stylistic base.

But while it's natural, it's also a bit sad. Monday at Roseland represented another inevitable step in the commercialization and homogenization of what was once an intense urban cult phenomenon. More power to Donna Summer if she can become a star on the Westchester-Westbury-Las Vegas circuit; that's clearly what she'd like to be.

But one hopes there will continue to be people who turn out clever, danceable, sexy records for the real center of the disco scene—the actual discos, themselves.

At a rather far extreme from Miss Summer, we have Steeleye Span, which opens at the Bottom Line tonight for a three-day run. This is a five-member British folk-rock group, and right away one might say something about the notion of "folk-rock."

The origins of the term go back to the folk revival of the early 1960's, and then to groups like the early Byrds that took the arch stylizations of Peter, Paul and Mary and others and amplified them with electric instruments and a rock beat.

The acoustic groups were always dreadfully snobbish about such maneuvers, and this observer never could quite figure out why. The careful arrangements and harmonizations of the more clean-cut exemplars of acoustic folk were just as far from the rude spirit of actual folk music as the electric folk-rockers were from them.

After all, folk music means music the folk creates and likes, and what could be more truly folk music today than rock, especially the primitive kind. If anything, the folk-rockers should be reproached for being too artsy by the rockers, rather than for being too noisy by the folkies. Folkies in that sense are really elitist antiquarians. There's nothing morally or aesthetically wrong about liking quaint old music, to be sure. But real folk music is fresh and vital.

What Steeleye Span does is take old British folk songs or ballads and arrange them for a blend of electric and amplified-acoustic instruments (or, sometimes, they create new songs inspired by old ones). The group has won enormous popularity at home, supplanting the old Fairport Convention as the number-one group of this type. In this country, Steeleye Span's concerts are generally rousing successes, but that fervor hasn't so far been translated into appreciable record sales. The group is hoping that its latest disk, "Rocket Cottage," will break that pattern.

Maddy Prior, the charming and sweet-voiced lead singer, and Tim Hart, who plays guitar and dulcimer, are the original members of the band. They toured the acoustic folk circuit in Britain in the mid-1960's but, says Miss Prior, they had no hesitations at all about switching over to an electric band format.

"What frustrated us most of all about the folk circuit was the financial impossibility of working with other musicians," Miss Prior said the other day from Chicago. "We found it limiting. We wanted to try something electric, to do something different. The whole folk scene at that time was restless, moving in that direction. We happened to be lucky enough to get the money to do it, but a lot of others would have if they'd had the chance. The same thing was happening in America at the time, with folk-rock and country-rock. It was inevitable."

What keeps Steeleye Span honest is the obvious affection and sensitivity the five musicians have for their folk material, and the appealing way they translate that affection into electric terms. But Miss Prior is eager to stress that the group has no didactic purpose in mind, secretly hoping to convert rock fans to "pure" folk music.

"It's not educational," she insists. "If they enjoy the folk music, they'll find out about it themselves. I don't believe in starting any crusade."

Midland International (which is distributed by RCA Corporation) and the Bottom Line have agreed to release a series of records of live performances from the club. Each record is meant to include several artists, and there will supposedly be six disks per year for three years.

It's tempting to be a bit cynical about this. The Bottom Line grandly announced a plan to present videotaped shows from the club last year, but the undertaking quickly and quietly fell through. And the two owners admit there has been no effort made so far to obtain releases from the various record companies involved. But they do say they have taped a number of artists who have performed at the Bottom Line—all those that gave their permission. The total amounts to some 400 performances by some 250 artists.

"We have no idea of the artists' availability," said Alan Pepper, one of the owners. "If we can't get the people, we'll have to turn the concept around or abort the project."

Two surprise hits of recent months have been Heart and Boston, and both are deserved successes. Heart is a Canadian-American group fronted by two sisters, Ann and Nancy Wilson. The closest parallel here is to the present Fleetwood Mac lineup, and it indicates once again a growing national predilection for women in rock. At their heaviest the Wilsons do rock, in a strong and straightforward manner. More often they deal in a more traditionally feminine kind of wistful soft rock. At all times they are never less than agreeable, and one looks forward to seeing them in live performance.

Boston is a five-man group that is much more overtly devoted to rock-and-roll. But it blends hard and soft, AM and FM sounds in the manner of most of the best and most successful present-day groups, and does it in a way that sounds both purposeful and stylistically focused.

Music: Leonid Koga With the Philharmo

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

It was a typical Boulez program: a Handel concerto, the Berg Violin Concerto and an elaborate work by Olivier Messiaen. Mr. Boulez and the New York Philharmonic took on those three works last night in Fisher Hall, with the assistance of Leonid Kogan, soloist in the Berg.

The Messiaen was the most fun, even if after the third movement a group of subscribers fled the hall as though angry hornets were on their trail. Mr. Boulez chose Messiaen's "Et Exspecto Ressurectionem Mortuorum," a score for orchestra minus strings, and with especially heavy percussion.

This is one of the French composer's religious and symbolic scores. "The three reverberations . . . symbolize simultaneously the call of the Trinity, the solemn moment of the resurrection, and the distant song of the stars. The Pascal Introit in the chimes and 'cencerros'—small Mexican bells—"and the trumpet alleluia with its halo of harmonics, symbolize one of the qualities of the glorious body. . . ."

Thus, in a way, "Et exspecto . . ." is a symphonic poem, though of course a highly mystical one. The actual music is nowhere as fearsome and abstruse as the program or, indeed, as the actual construction of the score. Dissonant as some of the writing is, it has a tonal feeling. And it often builds up to a gorgeous welter of sound, on this occasion aided by a lusty young percussionist with an enormous tam-tam. Some 2,600 jaids of ears must still be ringing from the mightly wallops that Messiaen called for and were delivered. These ears still are.

As in so many Messiaen scores, there were bird calls, hypnotic repeated patterns, apocalyptic shrieks and even a sponsored by the Essex Fox Hounds. Horses and riders that ordinarily jump at major race tracks will be competing at Moorland Farms, just off Route 202, opposite the shopping center in Far Hills, N.J. The first of six races there that are sanctioned by the National Steeplechase and Hunt Association will begin at 2 P.M., while there will be two preliminary pony races beginning at 12:30 P.M. Last year, more than 15,000 people showed up for the races, and a great many of them got there before noon and then spent the time picnicking and enjoying cocktails. Admission is $5, but the price for reserved parking ranges from $15 to $100. Proceeds go to the Somerset Hospital. For information on parking, call Gail Kinney at (201) 725-4000.

VAN CLIBURN IN QUEENS

Van Cliburn will be in Queens on Saturday and Sunday, playing MacDowell's Piano Concerto No 2 and Liszt's Piano Concerto No. 1 on the opening programs of the Queens Symphony Orchestra's new season. The concerts—8:30 P.M. on Saturday and 3 P.M. on Sunday—will be held in Colden Center at Queens College, which is at the Kissena Boulevard exit of the Long Island Expressway in Flushing. The other works on the programs are Strauss's "Don Juan" and Vaughan Williams's Fantasia on a Theme of Thomas Tallis. David Katz, the orchestra's music director, will conduct. Tickets at the box office for $7 down to $4.50. For information, call 268-3440.

A JAZZY PUPPET SHOW

There will be a puppet show at 2 P.M. at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Saturday that will also be an excursion through jazz—from ragtime to avant-garde. The show is narrated by a Mr. Trumpet, who talks about the great people of jazz, who, of course, are represented by puppets. The music includes the original recording of Count Basie's "One O'Clock Jump," and even some of the latter-day sounds of Ornette Coleman. The performance, which is by the Poko Puppets, will be the first of a series of four puppet shows sponsored by the Friends of BAM. Tickets are $8 for the series and $2.50 for individual performances. At 30 Lafayette Street. Information: 636-4138.

Sunday

BACH IS BACK

Another season of an "Evening with Johann S." will begin Sunday at 5 P.M. at Holy Trinity Lutheran Church, Central Park West at 65th Street. Johann S. is Papa Bach, and his Cantata No. 80 ("Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott") will be performed under the direction of Frederick Grimes, the organist and choirmaster of Holy Trinity. Soloists, the choir and the resident chamber orchestra will also be there. The series is scheduled to continue weekly until next Feb. 20, and then end on Easter Sunday, April 10, after a break for Lent. The cantatas will be presented much the way they were at St. Thomas Church in Leipzig, Germany, where Bach was cantor from 1723 to 1750 and had to prepare a cantata for each Sunday based on the Gospel lesson for the day. Admission at Holy Trinity is free, but an offering is taken. Information: 877-6815.

SPIRITUAL CHORUS

The Heritage Society Chorus of the Harlem School of the Arts will offer a program of spirituals Sunday at 4 P.M. in the Church of the Heavenly Rest at Fifth Avenue and 90th Street. The chorus, which will be conducted by Dorothy Maynor, its founder and musical director, is made up of 100 voices, all dedicated to the preservation of spirituals. The chorus made its debut at Alice Tully Hall last year, and has since performed in Washington, at the United Nations and elsewhere, and invited to Europe. Sunday's program will be made up of spirituals grouped loosely under five headings: tribulation, deliverance, songs about Jesus, children's songs and jubilation. Contributions made at the door are tax deductible. Information: 926-4100.

HOVERCRAFT ON HUDSON

A hovercraft is a boat that rides above the water on a cushion of air. There are hovercraft that regularly cross he English Channel, and there and there hovercraft are used by commuters. On Sunday, however, you can ride the hovercraft Excalibur just for the fun of it. Every hour on the hour from 11 A.M. through 5 P.M. it will leave the Lighthouse Marina in Nyack, N.Y., for an approximately one-hour ride up and down the Hudson River. The hovercraft is completely enclosed and heated, and has big windows all around it. The price is $5 for adults, $3 for children. To get there, cross the Tappan Zee Bridge, and get off at Exit 11. This will lead you into Nyack. The marina is at the foot of Burd Street. Call Hovertransport in Bridgeport, Conn., (203) 333-3345, for information.

MUSICAL BROOKLYN

The Brooklyn Symphony Orchestra, which is the borough's orchestra of young professionals, opens its 26th season on Sunday at 3 P.M. in Pratt Institute's Memorial Hall. Geoffrey Michaels will play Beethoven's Violin Concerto in D, and Martin Canellakis, the orchestra's music director, will conduct Rossini's "Tancredi" Overture and Mendelssohn's Symphony No. 4, the "Italian" Symphony. This season the orchestra will offer five concerts—four in Brooklyn, one at Town Hall. Admission for each concert is $2. For information, call 789-3068, or 636-3684. Pratt Institute is at Willoughby Avenue and Ryerson Street. The subway stop is the Clinton-Washington station on the IND's GG line.

Among its singers were Bing Crosby. It was, as Emery Davis—son of the late Meyer Davis, the society band leader—points out, "the first big band."

"We talk about bringing back the big bands," Mr. Davis says. "Here's the first one. And no one has brought it back."

Mr. Davis became involved in the Whiteman concert when Mr. Sudhalter, who came home to the United States a year ago, walked into his office last May looking for arrangements that might be used for another of his band revival projects—the California Ramblers, one of the most prolific recording bands of the 20's. Meyer Davis, who went into the band business in 1913, built up a library in which orchestrations representative of any year since then can be found. When Mr. Sudhalter, by way of introducing himself, gave Emery Davis a copy of his Beiderbecke book, copies of the English records by the new Paul Whiteman Orchestra and the program of the Whiteman concert, Mr. Davis's immediate response was, "Let's do a Paul Whiteman concert here."

"My father and Paul Whiteman had parallel successful careers during the same years although they never competed with each other," Mr. Davis pointed out. "Whiteman never played for parties and my father never played theaters or concerts.

"But the Davis organization has always felt that the melody is the most important part of a song," he went on. "We have never gone with the idea of the jazz buff in seeing how far you can get away from the melody. Paul Whiteman did the same thing. He nodded his head at jazz and gave it a voice. But he got back to the melody."

Whiteman had to keep many audiences happy, Mr. Sudhalter emphasizes, and the jazz audience was just a minority.

"The arrangements for the Whiteman band," he said, "were a blend of European light orchestral writing with various seasonings that struck a balance we hear today in everything from society orchestras to the Boston Pops, in Muzak, in film orchestration. It was a blend but it was done by the best available writers and the best available players.

"Bix and the jazzmen in the band never got featured billing," he stressed. "The people who were featured were Henry Busse, the trumpeter, Chet Hazlett, the versatile saxophonist, Willie Hall, the trombonist who could play 'Nola' on the trombone while he stood on his head, and singers such as Bing Crosby and the Rhythm Boys—things that entertained people."

Despite this, tonight's program will lean heavily toward the jazz elements in the Whiteman repertory.

"The efforts in that direction by such Whiteman arrangers as Bill Challis, Lennie Hayton and Tom Satterfield have proved musically more durable," Mr. Sudhalter explained. "Many of Ferde Grofe's big arrangements don't stand up as well."

In tonight's program, Mr. Sudhalter will once again play the role of Bix Beiderbecke, Marty Grosz will "convey the feeling" (to use Mr. Sudhalter's delicate terminology) of Eddy Lang on banjo and guitar, Bernie Privin will be Andy Secrest, a trumpeter who had more opportunities with Whiteman than Bix Beiderbecke, and Larry Carr will sing Bing Crosby's songs.

Finding someone to play Jimmy Dorsey's clarinet role was difficult because, since Benny Goodman became a superstar in the mid-30's, it is difficult to find a clarinetist today whose style is sufficiently unaffected by Mr. Goodman to be able to play in Mr. Dorsey's 1920's style. The role will be taken by Eddie Barefield, a 67-year-old clarinetist who developed in the Southwest in the 1920's.

There is also Ferde Grofe's arrangement of "Happy Feet," which Mr. Davis considers "a curiosity." "It is Grofe's attempt to write a jazz vehicle," he said.

Hobnobbing With Candidates

President Ford will be in upstate New York tomorrow and on Long Island on Sunday. Senator Walter F. Mondale, the Democratic candidate for Vice President, will be in New York City on Sunday and in Buffalo on Monday. And the six candidates for United States Senator in the three-state area will be going through the traditional frenzy of pre-election campaigning.

There are certainties and uncertainties about these plans.

Certain is that any place where a Democrat is in proximity to a musical group spectators will be subjected to "Happy Days Are Here Again," that President Ford will be greeted by the "Michigan Fight Song," that Secret Service men will let crowds of unknown strangers squash about the candidates and at the same time will vigorously shove away the reporters whose identities have been well-checked in advance, that the hand-lettered placards will draw more attention than the printed ones (there is a specialized political sideline in the production of clever hand-lettered placards), that the pictures the next day will show some candidate kissing some infant.

So that anyone bent upon politician-watching would do well to check the schedules with the local political headquarters first. What follows is an advance guide as to the local weekend whereabouts of the major candidates.

National Candidates

President Ford will be in Syracuse tomorrow for a rally at 8:30 P.M. at the War Memorial. On Sunday, he will attend church in Buffalo and then appear at a late-morning rally there. Later in the day, there will be two Long Island rallies, one at 1:30 P.M. at Colony Hill in Hauppage and then, at 7:30, he will be the star attraction at an extravaganza staged by the star Republican leader, Joseph M. Margiotta of Nassau County, in the Nassau Coliseum, Uniondale.

Senator Mondale arrives at LaGuardia at 5 P.M. on Sunday and is expected to appear at a rally or two in Manhattan. On Monday morning he will do a walking tour in New York City, then head for Philadelphia, and then for Buffalo late in the day.

New York

James L. Buckley, the Conservative-Republican incumbent, flies today to his airport news conference, then returns to LaGuradia for a motorcade, starting at 5:30 P.M., through Flushing and parts of the Bronx and ending in the Inwood section of Manhattan. Along the way, Sen. Buckley will stop to greet onlookers at the intersection of Main Street and Roosevelt Avenue in Flushing at about 6 P.M. and at the intersection of Broadway and 207th Street in Manhattan at about 7:15 P.M. At 10 A.M. tomorrow, he walks along East 86th Street, starting at Second Avenue, then heads for Rockland with a 1 P.M. rally at the Orangeburg Town Hall, a 2 P.M. Republican luncheon in the Hi-Ho Restaurant, Nyack, a 3 P.M. Republican rally at the Grand Union Shopping Center, Clarkstown, a 3:40 Conservative Party meeting at 180 Rockland Plaza, Nanuet.

Daniel P. Moynihan, the Democratic challenger, goes from his "AM New York" appearance this morning to a noon-time speech at the City Club, and then heads for Buffalo. At 3:30 P.M., he holds a news conference at Maggiotto's gas station, 137 Niagara Street, then attends a series of receptions for local candidates, ending at 9 P.M. in the Executive Motor Inn in Cheektowaga with Assemblyman Steve Greco and Senator Joseph Tauriello. Tomorrow morning he speaks to the Consumer Assembly in the Statler-Hilton at 9:15, attends a labor rally at 11 in Electricians' Hall, Melville, L.I., a Bronx Democratic women's lunch in Chateau Pelham at 12:30, has walking tours through Queens penciled in for the afternoon, and a $100-a-ticket fund-raiser in Regine's at 10 P.M.

New Jersey

Senator Harrison A. Williams, the Democratic incumbent, has too many stops to list today. He starts at 6:45 A.M. at Kaiser Aluminum Edison, and, with an itinerary that looks like a dentist's appointment-sheet, campaigns through Middlesex County until a Woodbridge Democratic meeting at the 7 Arches in Perth Amboy at 8 P.M., then heads for Sheriff John Cryan's dinner in the Club Navajo, Irvington, and the Martin Luther King dinner-dance in the Robert Treat Hotel, Newark. Tomorrow he attends a Ward E. rally in Jersey City, at 7 P.M., the Hudson Bus Owners dinner in the Skyline Cabana, Jersey City, at 8:45 and drops in at the Perth Amboy Democratic dinner at the 7 Arches and the greater Elizabeth Democratic Association affair at the Polish Falcons' Club in Elizabeth.

David Norcross, the Republican challenger, keeping his schedule loose because of possible help from Ford-family campaigners, lists a Union County Republican workers meeting in the American Legion Hall, Union, at 7:30 tonight.

Connecticut

Senator Lowell Weicker, the Republican incumbent, is at Andrew Ward High School, Fairfield, at 8:45 this morning to address the Fairfield Education Association, at DePaolo Junior High in Southington at 10:30, has his picture taken with a whale at 11:25 in the West Hartford Children's Museum, at Colt Industries and Travelers Insurance in Hartford in the afternoon, has a tentative evening date at a Waterbury Republican committee fund-raising event. Tomorrow morning he tours Fairfield County shopping centers, including Good Wives Shopping Center in Darien, Main Street Mall in Westport and Stop & Shop in Fairfield.

Gloria Schaeffer, the Democratic challenger, will be in New Haven for "teachers day," at a school administrators' conference in Hamden and at the Mite Corporation, New Haven, this morning and in Hartford at a series of Democratic functions this afternoon.

TV WEEKEND

By JOHN J. O'CONNOR

Lucille Ball joins Bob Hope in his special, tonight on NBC at 8.

Friday

Tonight is dominated by specials. Last year, the two-hour production celebrating 25 years of Bob Hope on television did very nicely in the ratings for NBC. So tonight at 8, the network is offering another two-hour Bob Hope sampler, this one featuring highlights from 26 years of the durable performer's shows. Special guests thanking him for the memories are Lucille Ball, Neil Simon, Don Rickles and Norman Lear.

At 9 P.M., there is the battle of the movies. CBS has the class act in terms of serious film with "Badlands," a movie produced, written and directed by Terence Malick. Martin Sheen and Sissy Spacek play the leading characters. But ABC, ever wiley in its counter-programming poise, has the irresistible shlock. It's a made-for-television product called "Look What's Happened to Rosemary's Baby."

Having neither read the novel nor seen the movie, I am part of that benighted minority unfamiliar with the original of "Rosemary's Baby." That gap is quickly bridged by flashbacks in this television sequel. With Ruth Gordon, Ray Milland and their witches' coven cackling in the background, the young child of Satan is spirited away by Rosemary (now played by Patty Duke Aspin). This being ecumenical television, they take refuge in a synagogue, where Rosemary wards off the evil ones with a crucifix. Meanwhile, Ruth Gordon is doing her best on the telepathy circuits. "Whaddya want from my life," she growls at her disbelieving cohorts, "I'm telling you what I'm getting."

Meanwhile, Rosemary's husband (George Maharis) is in Hollywood, preparing to collect on the stardom promised for selling his son to the devil. But he is still nervous about his first picture. "I know you've done a lot for me," he tells Milland, "and I hate to ask—but I want Paul Newman."

And so it goes, a nutty mixture of camp and special effects. The baby is kidnapped and raised by none other than Tina Louise. So, what's happened to Rosemary's baby, you might ask. It seems he (Stephen McHattie) has grown up to be a rock singer, which, evidentally, is about as close to Satan as anyone can get these days.

But when all else fails, lunacy comes nicely to the rescue. Offering a marijuana joint to McHattie, Milland explains that "we must keep up with the times—as a matter of fact, at our age we must worry about what liquor does to our liver." Then, sitting amid Hollywood luxury with Rosemary's husband, a disgruntled Ruth Gordon complains: "We only have a couple more days out here, and you said we were going to meet Charlton Heston." This unbelievable project was written and produced by Anthony Wilson and directed by Sam O'Steen. The director of photography, which is excellent, is John A. Alonzo.

For those whose sense of humor may wander in a different direction, WOR, Channel 9, is offering at 10 P.M. something called "American Newsreel of Crime" starring Jimmy Breslin, who sits at a typewriter in what could be either a newsroom or a police station. Proceeding on the theory that Americans have long had a love affair with criminals, though not necessarily with crime, Mr. Breslin, with the aid of old newsreels, applies his impeccable saloon manner to everythig from John Dillinger to prohibition, which "had to be the worst idea anyone ever thought of—no question."

In Mr. Breslin's class-conscious world, it's the drinking "foreigners" against the hypocritical WASPS. "The WASPS had to keep them sober," he explains, "otherwise, who'd sweep the street?" At the commercial breaks, Mr. Breslin can be seen rolling a piece of blank paper into his typewriter. All that's missing is Rosalind Russell shouting in the background.

Saturday

At 10:30 P.M. Channel 9 is offering the first of two hours celebrating ten years of "Firing Line" during which William F. Buckley Jr. uses clips from the series to comment on the craft of the television interview. (The second hour is scheduled for Wednesday at 8 P.M.) In this "pastiche of our talkative times," Mr. Buckley deplores "the cookie-cutter statements" of many chiefs of state, including South Africa's John Vorster, Israel's Yitzhak Rabin and England's Edward Heath.

He is happiest with public figures who are least concerned with the impact of what they say, even though he may strongly disagree with them. Germaine Greer's "lambent badinage" was invigorating. The logic of the late John Crossman was ch the ego of Norman Ma be stimulating.

Then there were Rebecca West in 1968 traitors as being "chic pressing a form of di the traitors were tolera Miss West believed, on were from the upper

Though Professor Mintzberg has his critics—some call his research thin and his conclusions vastly oversimplified—many businessmen seem to find his composite portrait recognizable. His article, "The Manager's Job: Folklore and Fact," in the Harvard Business Review a year or so ago has stimulated reprint sales at a faster clip than any previous management essay—about 31,000 so far, a Review spokesman said. The article also won the McKinsey award as the Review's best last year.

The McGill professor's work "pins down exactly the kind of life a manager in any business leads," said Roger Bell of IBM Canada Ltd. Professor Mintzberg spoke last week at the company's executive-development program.

Professor Mintzberg's popular article drew on his book "The Nature of Managerial Work," published three years ago. That book, along with four others in progress—on organizational structure, power in organizations, decision-making and strategy formulation—will make up a sweeping theory of management policy, he said.

Professor Mintzberg has found:

¶The manager works immersed in an unrelenting stream of callers and telephone calls. Jumping from topic to topic, he thrives on interruptions and, more often than not, disposes of items in 10 minutes or less. Though he may have 50 projects going, all are delegated. He juggles them, checking each one periodically before sending it back into orbit.

¶The manager spends as much time *dealing with outsiders—his peers, cus*tomers, business contacts and government people—as with subordinates (or superiors). He is constantly alert for snatches of "soft" information—gossip, hearsay, speculation—that may keep him a step ahead. Passing along such tidbits to the right subordinate is an important part of his job.

U. S. TRADE DEFICIT GREW LAST MONTH BY $778.9 MILLION

9-Month Imbalance at $3.4 Billion —Economic Recoveries of Trading Partners Are Lagging

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28 (AP)—The nation's trade balance slipped deeper into the red in September as imports exceeded exports by $778.9 million, the Commerce Department reported today. The figure, *wider than August's deficit of $757.7 mil*lion, brought to $3.4 billion the total trade deficit for 1976.

The imbalance of payments creates a drain of dollars from the United States. In the long run this could result in a lower value for the dollar in relation to other world currencies.

Administration analysts initially had predicted a small surplus for 1976, but later in the year they estimated that the nation would suffer a trade deficit of $2 billion to $3 billion by year's end. In eight of the nine months for which figures are available, the United States has imported more goods than it has sold abroad.

The September deficit occurred despite a $27.3 million drop in oil imports last month. But Commerce Department figures show that total oil imports for the year are running 20 percent ahead of the 1975 pace and apparently by year's end will exceed the record 2.3 billion barrels of petroleum products imported in 1973.

*Import items that increased in Septem*ber were iron and steel, up $56.5 million; sugar, up $99.8 million, and auto imports from nations other than Canada, up $34.1 million.

Overall, imports rose 2 percent last month while exports rose 1.9 percent. Both increases reversed declines of about 3 percent in August in both imports and exports.

Corn shipments from this country fell $100.8 million and wheat exports dropped by $43.7 million during the month. Exports of cotton and soybeans increased by $84 million. Other sizable increases in exports included coal, up $90.4 million, and military aircraft, up $65.9 million.

Analysts generally say the trade deficit reflects the fact that the United States economic recovery has been stronger than that of its trading partners, increasing American demand for foreign goods while holding down overseas demand for United States goods.

Oil Companies Build Inventories Before Price Increase by OPEC

By STEVE RATTNER

With a price increase by the Organization *of Petroleum Exporting Countries al*most certain on Jan. 1, the multinational oil companies—eager to protect themselves at least temporarily—are scram*bling to build up inventories at today's* lower prices.

During the week ended Oct. 22, the American Petroleum Institute reported yesterday, crude oil stocks were more than 10 percent above year-earlier levels and oil experts expect the buildup to continue.

Unlike past inventory buildups, when the companies used excess tanker capacity to store oil, as a result of rapidly growing consumption, this year's preparations are being hampered by ceilings imposed by the producing countries and by problems in achieving higher production.

In Kuwait and in Saudi Arabia, govern*ment production ceilings are now being exceeded—permissible because of slack* demand earlier in the year. At Ras Tanura, Saudia Arabia's major loading area, 37 tankers and 11 freighters were lined up to refill as of Oct. 22, according to industry sources.

With early price increases, the multinational oil companies often reported large windfall profits as a result of the increase in the value of their inventories, but more recently, because of the widespread adoption of "Last In, First Out" accounting, the effect has been somewhat more moderate.

One more indication of the potential impact might be the 1975 experience when OPEC imposed a 10 percent increase and when the Exxon Corporation, then on LIFO, reported $90 million in realized inventory profits, of which, according to a spokesman, a "small part" was because of the OPEC action.

But the uplifting effect of price increases on profits may linger—Texaco Inc., the nation's second largest oil company, reported at the end of last year that although its inventories were valued in company financial statements at $2.3 billion, their market value was actually $519 million higher.

Criticism of Profits Is Rejected

The companies maintain that criticism of these profits is unjustified because of the high cost of replenishing inventories and because of tight regulations in many foreign countries, which, they say, make recovering added costs difficult. Oil analysts say that any negative impact of these regulations on profits would probably be felt in the first quarter of 1977.

The companies' problem is how to get more oil. An indication of the intensity of the pressure is the price of crude oil in the secondary or "spot" market. According to an industry executive, Arabian light crude—the grade against which all others are priced—is selling for $11.90 to $11.95 a barrel, compared with the official price of $11.51.

In Kuwait, the British Petroleum Company is producing at its maximum permissible rate and recently bought an additional 100,000 barrels a day, although without the 15-cent discount it customarily receives. The Gulf Oil Corporation, the other major customer of Kuwait, is "considering" requesting an increase in its ceiling from 500,000 to 700,000 barrels a day, according to a spokesman. In Iran, crude oil production for September set

Stocks Drop 3.49 Points to 952.63 After Two Big Gaining Sessions

By VARTANIG G. VARTAN

Stock prices dropped moderately yes*terday after two sessions of brisk ad*vances.

The Dow Jones industrial average, showing small changes throughout the day, slipped 3.49 points to 952.63. In the two preceding sessions, the Dow rose more than 18 points in a recovery touched off mainly by hopes that oil prices would be increased by only a modest amount in December when Middle East oil-producing nations make the decision.

General Motors, fueled by a 63 per*cent gain in third-quarter earnings,* traded as high as 74¼—its best price since 1973—before easing to close at 73¼, down ⅜, in heavy trading. In late 1974, G.M. shares sold as low as 28⅞.

The market's two big losers on the active list were Hughes Tool and General Foods, with both issues reacting to disappointing news on the earnings front.

Hughes Tool Drops 5⅛

Hughes Tool, a big favorite of many institutional investors, tumbled 5⅛ points to 36⅞, after trading within a point of this year's low of 37¾. The stock sank after the producer of oilfield equipment announced on Wednesday a 41 percent decline in quarterly profits. Between the autumn of 1974 and the summer of 1975, the shares of Hughes Tool nearly tripled in price.

CHICAGO BANK SETS LOWER PRIME RATE; OTHERS RESIST CUT

CONTINENTAL ILLINOIS AT 6½%

Downward Pressure Is Continuing on All Short-Term Interest— Loan Demand Called Weak

By PAUL LEWIS

Downward pressure on interest rates continued yesterday when the Continental Illinois National Bank and Trust Company of Chicago, the nation's seventh largest bank, said it would cut its prime lending rate from 6¾ percent to 6½ percent, effective today.

No other banks immediately followed this action. Representatives of several large New York banks privately expressed displeasure at the Continental Il*linois move, asserting that they would* resist any further reduction in their own prime rates.

Money-market figures released by the New York Federal Reserve Bank yesterday showed that Citibank, under a formula it sometimes follows, would have the option of reducing its prime rate to 6½ percent when it considers the question today.

Many large banks had also said they would resist the last round of cuts when it was initiated about a month ago by the First National Bank of Chicago and the Morgan Guaranty Trust Company, lowering the prime rate from 7 percent to 6¾ percent. However, within a short while all major banks had followed suit.

A Banker's Prediction

The New York Times/Oct. 28, 1976

Philadelphia National Bank, predicted that banks would have difficulty maintaining their prime lending rates at 6¾ *percent if short-term borrowing rates "re*main at current low levels for the next few weeks" now that Continental Illinois had moved down. Continental Illinois has assets of more than $22 billion.

Explaining the decision to cut the prime rate to 6½ percent, Donald C. Miller, a Continental Illinois vice president, said it reflected "the recent easing of money-market conditions" as well as "weak demand for loans."

A Downward Pattern

But, although Mr. Miller thought the lower rate might enable Continental Illinois to "pick up some new loans," he said it would not lead to a "substantial increase in business." This sentiment was widely echoed by other bankers, who also maintained that lower lending rates would reduce bank earnings without producing any offsetting rise in loan demand. A bank's prime rate is the interest charged on loans to its most creditworthy corporate customers.

In the last few weeks, short-term interest rates have been moving steadily downward. Despite some stiffening during the last week, the rate on Federal funds (overnight loans between banks)

Brooklyn Company, Costs High, Competes by Automation

By AGIS SALPUKAS

The Ideal Corporation pays its workers an average of $5.63 an hour to make hose clamps and turn-indicator flashers for cars. Some of its competitors in the South and Midwest pay $3 to $3.50.

Ideal, the world's biggest maker of hose and pipe clamps, and whose plant is in Canarsie, a corner of Brooklyn, pays $5.75 per 1,000 kilowatt-hours for power to heat and light its plant and run its machines. Plants in Ohio pay $3.20, and in Kentucky, the rate is $1.47.

"How the hell do they do it?" one competitor asked when told what Ideal paid its workers. "Maybe I should go up there and join them," he added. His plant, in a suburb of Baltimore, pays an average wage of $3.45 an hour.

Ideal has been able to compete by continually phasing out labor intensive jobs with highly automated machinery, most of which has been developed by its own engineers.

Management has also adopted an energy conservation program, ranging from turning out most of the lights in the halls to smoothing out production so that there are now fewer expensive peaks of energy use.

'You Can't Have That in New York'

"We have to be superefficient," John Wenzel, president of Ideal, said in an interview as he puffed on a cigar in his office at the plant. "We constantly have to get our costs per unit down."

"Jobs where a worker takes a piece, puts it in the machine and goes thump, thump," he said—carrying out the motions with his hands—"you can't have that in New York anymore."

So far, Mr. Wenzel said, Ideal, which decided to stay in Brooklyn and build a new plant in 1971, has not been tempted to pack up and move to the Sunbelt or the West.

The New York Times/John Soto

Part of packaging operations at Ideal Corporation in Canarsie, Brooklyn. Workers there average $3.63 an hour.

Despite its higher costs, Ideal has been able to maintain its lead and expand its world force and market.

Management has also been able to keep costs in line with plants within the parent company, the Parker Hannifin Corporation of Cleveland, one of the Fortune 500 companies.

*Top management or at Parker Hanni*fin, the nation's largest maker of fluid power system and components, believes that plants are better off in small towns in rural areas where wages and taxes are usually lower and construction costs more moderate.

Although the parent company has not put any pressure on Ideal to move, management is aware that its average price of 20 cents for each clamp cannot be out of line with prices charged by its competitors.

To stay competitive, Ideal's management has continually pursued an aggressive campaign to automate, enabling its 800 workers to turn out more with less labor.

Last year, the company, which was founded in Brooklyn by Mr. and Mrs. Phillip Rauch in 1913 when they got an order for a dozen clamps, spent $1 million on developing, building and buying new machinery. In three years, by replacing workers who assembled parts by hand with machines that did

CREDIT PRICES CLOSE WITH NARROW GAINS

Continental Illinois Prime-Rate Cut and Federal Reserve News of Dip in Money Supply Are Spurs

By JOHN H. ALLAN

The credit markets wavered up and down within narrow limits several times yesterday and closed with small gains, nudged upward at one point when the Continental Illinois National Bank and Trust Company reduced its prime rate and at another point later when the Federal Reserve Board reported a decline in the nation's money supply. However, after each slight gain, prices tended to drift back downward.

Credit Markets

A substantial volume of new corporate financing was done, yesterday, with some local New York State issues marketed in the tax-exempt sector.

In the Federal agency securities field, the Tennessee Valley Authority announced plans to call for redemption $100 million of 9 percent bonds maturing in 1955 and $50 million of 9¼ percent bonds, also due in 1995, that were sold in 1970 at a period of peak interest rates.

To get the money to retire the two issues early, the T.V.A. sold 25-year bonds to the Federal Financing Bank at a rate of 7.95 percent. The peak rate paid by the authority in 1960 was 8¼ percent while in 1971 it was 7½ percent. Therefore, it seems unlikely that it will redeem any other issues early unless rates decline substantially from their present levels.

In the corporate bond market, the Caterpillar Tractor Company's $200 million of 25-year sinking fund debentures, rated Aa/AA, that were priced as 8's at par late Wednesday were offered to investors formally yesterday.

At the end of the afternoon, the issue was estimated to be more than 90 percent sold, according to Lehman Brothers, the investment banking firm managing the offering. The sinking fund gives the issue an average life of 18.2 years.

Three other corporate bond issues totaling $75 million were offered publicly yesterday, with all but perhaps $3 million reported sold to investors by the end of the afternoon.

The Washington Water Power Company, a hydro-electric utility in the Northwest, sold $30 million of A-rated 30-year 8¾ percent bonds priced at 100.53 to yield 8.70 percent. Kidder, Peabody & Company managed the underwriters.

The United States Trust Company sold $25 million of 8½ percent 25-year capital notes through a First Boston Corporation group, which reported that the offering was 85 percent or more sold. The notes were priced at 100.

The capital note sale was notable, investment bankers said, because U.S. Trust has not sold any securities publicly since its original equity offering in 1853.

In the third other corporate offering, the Southern Union Company raised $20 million by selling 8.70 percent 20-year debentures at par through a Dean Witter & Company underwriting group. A sinking fund will give the issue a 13-year average life.

An underwriting group led by Kidder Peabody priced two 10-year note issues of the Commercial Credit Company to be sold today to raise $125 million.

The total will include $100 million of 8.35 percent notes rated A and $25 million of 8.80 percent subordinated notes rated Baaa/BBB. Both will be priced at 100.

In the tax-exempt bond market, the Bond Buyer disclosed that its index of bond yields rose for the second consecutive week, moving up to 6.33 percent from 6.30 percent last week and from 6.25 percent two weeks ago.

Hughes Tool Setback—Fluke or Omen?

By ROBERT METZ

The Hughes Tool Company—the world's largest manufacturer of oil and gas drilling bits and an investor favorite in an era of feverish exploration for new energy sources—surprised Wall Street after the close of trading on Wednesday by reporting a sharp drop in earnings in the third quarter.

Hughes announced that it had earned just 48 cents a share in the latest quarter, far below the 82 cents a share it netted a year earlier.

Stockholders had a chance to sleep on the news and they evidently had bad dreams. The stock did not open on the New York Stock Exchange yesterday until 11:57 A.M. due to an imbalance of orders. Everyone, it seemed, wanted to sell the shares and no one wanted to buy.

When trading began, an accumulation of 101,000 shares inked the tape at 38, down 6 points from Wednesday's close to 44. The stock closed at 38⅞ off 5⅛ for the day. Hughes was the third most active stock on a total turnover of 219,600 shares.

Not only was Wall Street surprised and disappointed, but also, it appeared, was the Hughes management. In recent weeks the company told analysts that earnings for the full year would be in the neighborhood of the $3.41 a share Hughes earned in 1975.

Analysts now believe that Hughes is more likely to earn from $2.85 to $3 a share in 1976, a major setback for a company that until this year was in the select group that seemed always to report quarter-to-quarter improvements.

There was, perhaps, a hint that the company was slowing down a bit in the second quarter when Hughes reported earnings of 75 cents a share, down from 92 cents in the 1975 second quarter.

Apart from that, though, the record has been excellent. Analysts were divided in their opinions yesterday regarding Hughes, with some calling the quarterly result a fluke setback and others more concerned about the future.

Kevin M. Connoy, who analyzes the company for C. J. Lawrence & Company, is recommending the stock on the ground that the setback is explainable.

Mr. Connoy said that the earnings drop represented a classic manufacturing setback—the effect of rising costs at a time of lower unit demand. He said that Hughes had been paying 8 percent more for steel since July 1, 1976, and 8 percent more for labor since Sept. 1.

Thus, he added, even though oil tool sales were up so far this year, margins dropped sharply—to 33 percent, down from 39 percent. Nevertheless, he was optimistic about a quick recovery of profit momentum, largely because prices were raised an average of 9 percent as of October.

Contributing to the lackluster third-quarter result was the effect of a catch-up on tax payments on foreign sales, which raised this rate in the quarter to 48 percent from 40.8 percent in this year's first two quarters.

The new, higher foreign tax rate will be 43 percent. Thus the catchup and the new higher rate reduced the quarterly per-share net by 10 cents, Mr. Connoy said, while losses on the Argentine peso cost 6 cents a share.

"We look for the fourth-quarter earnings to move up," Mr. Connoy said. "We expect 85 to 90 cents a share." Hughes earned 89 cents in the fourth quarter of 1975.

Mr. Connoy cited rising demand for Hughes bits here and abroad as reasons for bullishness on the stock. The company, he said, had started delivery on a $21 million order for drill bits from Sonatrach, Algeria's state-owned oil company.

In recommending the stock, Mr. Connoy said that the company could earn up to $4.30 in 1977. The bad news on Wednesday caused him to reduce his estimate from $3.45 for 1976 to $2.85 to $3.

David R. Longmire, Hughes analyst for Spencer Trask, said that, while he was still positive on the company, he now liked other oil service companies better, specifically Halliburton and Schlumberger.

The Hughes attraction for institutional holders has been such that between the autumn of 1974 and the summer of 1975, the shares nearly tripled in price. With that kind of a record, disappointments are not accepted easily. Whether Hughes's profits recover or not, the future for the shares seems less assured.

Last year's shipments ...ing 9.9 billion pounds. ...has made a remarkable ...ear ago and we expect demand to continue strong into 1977," Mr. Goldsmith said.

He credited much of the improvement this year to the comeback of the transportation industry, particularly the automobile industry, which is using more aluminum in 1977 model cars and trucks as weight-saving measures.

But there are some signs that the pace of the aluminum recovery may be slowing down. Actual production in September amounted to 366,447 tons, compared with 300,011 tons in September 1975. However, August output had reached 371,185 tons.

Eric F. West, president of the Alcan Aluminum Corporation, a subsidiary of the Aluminium Company of Canada isn't really surprised by this apparent slowdown. In an interview yesterday, he said:

"Business has been very good, but I had predicted all along that there'd be a slowdown in the fourth quarter. The reason? It had to happen at the start of September because of good old election year jitters."

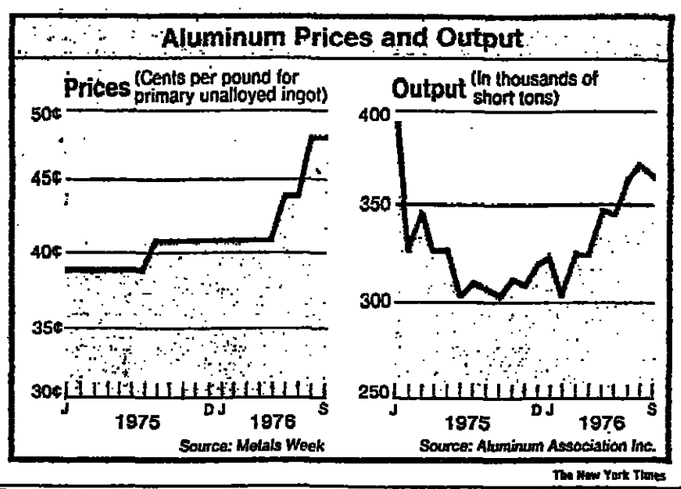
But Mr. West remains optimistic. "No matter who wins the election, we'll see a good upturn in the spring," he said.

William B. Renner, president of the Aluminum Company of America, disagrees somewhat with Mr. West. He said in an interview that he foresaw an increase in fourth-quarter activity, although he acknowledged that "we're not going like gangbusters right now as we were earlier this year."

Mr. Maier, who took over yesterday as chairman of the trade association, said in an interview that earlier this year he had forecast an industry growth of 27 percent but changed that later to 32 percent.

"Now I'm talking of a 30 to 31 percent boost for the year," he said. "Fourth quarter volume will be about the same as the third, and I must admit I'd not be unhappy if volume continued at this level."

Like Alcoa's Mr. Renner, Mr. Maier is not particularly bullish about industry expansion, seeing only "incremental additions" until a better rate of return develops and until environmental opposition to new plants lessens.



Geico Lists Net of $5.8 Million, First Profit Since 3d Quarter '74

By WILLIAM D. SMITH

The financially embattled Government Employees Insurance Company reported yesterday its first net profit since the third quarter of 1974. Geico announced net income after taxes of $5.8 million in the period ended Sept. 30 despite an underwriting loss of $7.3 million.

The company did not release year-earlier results, which were questioned Wednesday by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The S.E.C. charged that Geico had manipulated its financial statements to cover up mounting losses during 1975.

Geico entered into a consent agreement with the S.E.C. in the matter involving Norman Gidden, its former chairman, and Ralph C. Peck, former president.

Increase in Surplus

John J. Byrne, the company's present chairman and president, said that for the first time in more than a year statutory policy holders' surplus rose to $35.2 million as of Sept. 30 from $27.6 million on June 30.

For the first nine months of this year Geico's net loss was $34.29 million and the underwriting loss was $56.5 million.

In a letter to shareholders, Mr. Byrne, who took charge of the ailing company on May 5, said that third-quarter results "justify cautious optimism."

Geico lost $13.7 million in the second quarter and $26.4 million in the first quarter of this year.

The company had third-quarter operating income of $1.7 million. Realized capital gains of $4.1 million brought the net income to the $5.8-million level. Written premiums in the third quarter were $137.2 million while earned premiums totaled $165.4 million.

Healthier Look Reported

Analysts indicated that although the ailing company was looking healthier, a full cure had not yet been accomplished.

Mr. Byrne made the same point in his letter to shareholders. He commented, "Looking back, ours was one of the most dramatic and successful growth stories in the history of our industry. Looking ahead, we are cautious but confident of making the Geico story a happy one in the future as it has been, for our shareholders and policy holders in the past."

The commission said that now there were at least 13 regulatory bodies that received reports from their members, conducted examinations and enforced both the securities laws and their own rules.

Mr. Hills said it had long been the commission's view that duplication of effort "does not result in a higher level of investor protection commensurate with its cost, and should therefore be eliminated."

He added that responsibilities would be redistributed among the regulators, perhaps to only one, either by agreement among them or by "commission allocation."

It was understood that the N.A.S.D. was the most likely candidate if self-regulation were to be combined in a single agency.

In a separate development the commission postponed until Jan. 1, the effective date of amendments to its net capital rule involving transactions by specialists and market-makers in listed options contracts.

CITICORP

Earnings Statement for Twelve Months Ended September 30, 1976

Citicorp has made generally available to its security holders an earnings statement for the twelve months ended September 30, 1976, which covers beginning after the effective date of Citicorp's Registration Statement No. 2-54780 under the Securities Act of 1933, as amended relating to Citicorp's 8¼% Convertible Subordinated Notes Due 2000, which became effective on July 17, 1975. San Francisco Economists Optimistic on the Recovery

SAN FRANCISCO—From his observation post on the 40th floor of the Bank of America's handsome headquarters overlooking this city's famed bay, Walter E. Hoadley, one of the West's most widely known economists, must find it difficult to be pessimistic at any time. A recent visit showed that he was anything but gloomy about the nation's economic prospects.

The Economic Scene

The 60-year-old executive vice president of the nation's largest bank, who also serves as an adviser to a long list of Government agencies, universities and other civic, business and religious organizations, is definitely not a member of the camp that believes there is something basically wrong with the health of the American economy requiring sweeping corrective measures.

"I'm making a plea," he said in an interview, "for some realism on the economy. There's no question that we have had a slowdown lately, but the pause has been in the expansion, not in the recovery. That fact obviates fear about a recurrence of the recession."

Mr. Hoadley, who returned to his native city 10 years ago after a distinguished business career in the East, said he was optimistic about the business outlook for next year, but added: "The real question for 1977 is this: How satisfied will political leaders and the public be with only a moderately better year? I think the public wants it. If our political leaders can accept that and work on 'micro' stimulation in the unemployment and other areas, we can sustain the recovery for several years."

Sentiments along the same lines were voiced a few blocks away in the offices of another financial institution, the Crocker National Bank, and in the economics department of the San Francisco Federal Reserve Bank.

Robert K. Wilmouth, president of Crocker, said he felt that 1977 might be a "ho-hum year for a while and then pick up strength in the second quarter, continuing the recovery."

His bank's economics department stands by its recent observation: "The business horizon is void of the kinds of excesses and distortions that typically have brought expansions to a halt."

At the offices of the 12th District's Federal Reserve Bank here, Joseph Bisignano, its national economist, said that such pauses in the business recovery as the one last summer "should not be unexpected." He said that businessmen were "looking for a long recovery —and I am, too."

With respect to the international economic situation, another of the bank's economists, Hang-Sheng Cheng, said he was confident that the current global expansion, though slowing, would not turn into another recession.

The fact that most countries have given "more than lip service" to halting inflation, he said, is most encouraging. But he expressed concern that Britain, particularly, had not taken the strong measures needed to control inflation and that it had "too long pursued an excessively accommodative monetary policy."

His other major worry is the growing debt of the less-developed countries. Some of them, he said, have reached their credit limits and may be faced "with a sort of redlining policy" by international creditors.

Mr. Cheng saw the need for "better information" on the external debt financing by all nations and for some kind of financial safety net, in addition to the quota increases being sought by the International Monetary Fund, to aid any deficit country—not just the industrialized world, as proposed in Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's original plan.

San Francisco's leading economic analysts believe that the national economy is behaving better than generally perceived; that consumer spending and business capital spending will come along more vigorously next year to give it a renewed push, and that the surprising slack in Federal expenditures during the most recent quarter will provide a cushion of potential fiscal stimulus, if used.

Several suggested that the shortfall in Federal spending probably reflects the fiscal conservatism that has set in throughout the nation—"a fear of the wrath of the voters," as one put it, "because no one wants to be associated with wasteful expenditures these days."

Although the fiscal drag probably reduced the projected Federal deficit by some $13 billion, it also had the effect, together with the Ford Motor strike and others this year, of contributing to the length of the pause in he recovery. Many sources here believe the unspent funds will be spent next year, providing some additional economic potential for 1977, and no one seems to be particularly concerned about the possibility.

"The sheer knowledge in Congress that expenditures sagged below expectations," Mr. Hoadley said, "will certainly be a source of reappraisal if not temptation."

The Bank of America's economist, who was formerly chairman of the Federal Reserve Bank in Philadelphia, said the "moderately better" year he expects for 1977 would produce real growth of 5 percent, an inflation rate between 5 and 6 percent, an increase of 100,000 to 150,000 in new housing units and some stepup in capital spending by business. The expectations of several other economists here are in the same ball park.

The economic prospects for the nation as seen everywhere do not offer much hope for reducing the current 7.8 percent unemployment rate to any great extent—and that worries every one. So there is stress on the need for some microeconomic programs, rather than general monetary and fiscal stimulation, to attack the structural unemployment problem.

Nevertheless, optimism for extending the nation's recovery prevails here—and it does not spring from any narrow parochial viewpoint. The economy is not faring much better in California than elsewhere in the nation, though lately there has been some sharp improvement in several of this state's economic indicators, especially housing and industrial activity.

California's unemployment rate stood at 9.2 percent in August, the fifth highest among the nation's 50 states, but the rate dropped sharply to 8.7 percent last month. At that time, Florida had the top jobless rate at 10 percent, with Wyoming lowest at 3 percent.

Perhaps, however, the recent improvement in various economic indicators in the Golden State is a good omen for the rest of the nation.

Sales by Chains Gained by 10.1% For September

By HERBERT KOSHETZ

The nation's chain stores chalked up a sales gain of 10.1 percent in September compared with September 1975, Chain Store Age magazine reported yesterday. For the first nine months of the year, the chains went ahead of the corresponding period of 1975 by 11.1 percent.

The September gain, the best since April when chains went ahead by 13.3 percent, was deemed to be satisfactory despite unseasonable warm weather that held down the sale of fall apparel. The lag in clothing sales was offset by a rise in hard goods volume that included home furnishings and appliances, as well as automotive accessories.

Price increases accounted for about half of the dollar increases. Consumer prices in the 12 months from September 1975 went up more than 5 percent.

Sales of the five largest chains, which account for two-thirds of total chain sales, all showed sizable increases in September.

Sears, Roebuck & Company, the country's largest merchandising organization registered an increase of 9.3 percent in the month, its second-best gain in the last six months. The S. S. Kresge Company, second largest in dollar volume, went ahead of September 1975 by 22.4 percent, the largest increase among the five biggest chains. Kresge, however, showed a net increase of 221 operating units since 12 months ago.

The J. C. Penney Company, third-largest chain, achieved a gain of 6.7 percent compared to the year-ago month. F. W. Woolworth, fourth largest, showed an 11.3 percent improvement in sales. Montgomery Ward, fifth largest had a gain of 5.6 percent.

The table below lists September sales and percentage changes from the year-ago month, and for the nine-month period. Figures are not adjusted for changes in the number of operating units of individual chain organizations.

S. E. C. SETTLES A CASE WITH C. ARNHOLT SMITH

Former Banker and Three Others Were Accused of Track Scheme

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28 (AP) —The Securities and Exchange Commission announced today it had settled a case accusing C. Arnholt Smith, the former California banker, and other persons of trying secretly to merge a company operating New Mexico race tracks into a California corporation.

The case, filed in the United States District Court for the Southern District of California, grew out of dealings in 1974. The S.E.C. alleged that Mr. Smith and his associates secretly tried to merge the Fortuna Corporation of Sunland Park, N.M., into Kodiak Industries.

In the consent decree the four men neither admitted not denied guilt, but they agreed to let Fortuna shareholders who sold shares to Kodiak in 1974 to rescind those sales and to allow another vote by minority shareholders on whether to merge Fortuna into Kodiak.

Fortuna operates the Sunland Park and Ruidoso Downs racetracks in New Mexico and has about 2,500 shareholders. Kodiak Industries has headquarters in San Diego, Calif., and was controlled at the time by Dominic J. Alessio; his uncle, Anthony Alessio, and his brother-in-law, Alvin G. Rosa.

The S.E.C. alleged that the three, with the help of sizable loans from Mr.Smith's United States National Bank of San Diego tried to take over the racetrack corporation "to appropriate the assets and cash flow of Fortuna for their personal benefit," a plan that failed when the bank collapsed in October 1973.

The SEC said the collapse caught the Alessios with $4.7 million in loans owed to the Smith bank. The loans are now due to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, which is acting as receiver for the bank. The S.E.C. said some $2.8 million of those loans were now past due.

3 reasons Citibank's 48-Month Car Loan makes more sense than the loan most people get.

1. You pay less each month. So you have more each month.

If you're like most people, you may think a 36-month loan is the most sensible way to finance a car. Not so. On any amount over $3,500, you can get a Citibank 48-Month Car Loan and pay less each month—about $30 less on a $3,500 loan.

And because you pay less, you have more to sock away or invest or spend on other things.

2. You pay a lower annual percentage rate of only 11.4%.

You may also think the percentage rate on a short-term car loan is lower than on a longer loan. Not so. The rate on a Citibank 48-Month Car Loan is a low 11.4%. Compared to over 13% on most 36-month loans offered by banks.

3. You can get it faster and easier on The Loan Phone®.

You may think you have to make a special trip to the bank to apply for a car loan. Not so. You can apply for Citibank's 48-Month Car Loan just by calling The Loan Phone. Or, if you prefer, you can still visit any one of our 270 convenient branches.

Company reported that as a result of the acquisition of Ecol Ltd. in September, the company will earn an additional investment tax credit of approximately $38 million for 1976. Third quarter profits were enhanced by about $28.5 million of this investment tax credit, or 95 cents a share. Partially off-setting this was an after-tax cost of approximately $15 million from the application of Marathon's LIFO inventory valuation method to those crude oil inventories necessary to sustain higher levels of refinery operations.

4 CAR MAKERS TARGET A 13.6% RISE IN OUTPUT

Goal for 4th Quarter Bars Strikes or Cuts in Their Production

Special to The New York Times

DETROIT, Oct. 28—The domestic auto industry is targeting production of about 803,000 cars next month on its way to a fourth-quarter schedule of 2,195,000 units. The fourth-quarter total would be up 13.6 percent from last year's 1,932,000. But it would still be 16 percent below the fourth-quarter output record of 2,624,000 set in 1965.

The estimates are from Automotive News, Ward's Automotive Reports and other trade sources. They could be reduced by strikes or production cuts at the big three companies and the American Motors Corporation.

The Ford Motor Company, now stepping up production after a four-week strike against its domestic plants, faces another strike deadline Nov. 3 at its Canadian plants and a shutdown there could cause parts shortages affecting output on this side of the border.

The Chrysler Corporation faces a Nov. 5 deadline for a new contract settlement or a strike by its American and Canadian workers.

The General Motors Corporation must still come to terms on a new contract after the Chrysler talks are out of the way. A.M.C., meanwhile, has been cutting back production to keep inventories under control in the face of a sales slump.

A.M.C. had its Pacer Matador production lines closed at its Wisconsin plants this week, G.M. its Lordstown, Ohio, Vega-Astre plant.

Overall, auto production was scheduled to total 183,510 cars this week, up 1.1 percent from last week's 181,502 and 14.2 percent ahead of the 160,638 cars built in the comparable week a year ago, according to Automotive News.

Ford actually got back into production two weeks ago when it built 4,000 cars. Last week's Ford output was 25,000, and this week's is scheduled at 41,000.

Thus, Ford production for October would total 70,000, off 65 percent from last year. G.M.'s output of 469,000 is up 7 percent and Chrysler's output of 132,000 is up 63 percent, but A.M.C. output of 21,000 is down 38 percent.

Industry output will total 692,000 in October, down 8.3 percent from 755,000 last year because of the Ford strike. November's scheduled output of 803,000 will be up 31 percent from last November's 614,000 and will be 16 percent ahead of this month's total.

G.M.'s scheduled output of 456,000 will be down from October but 31 percent ahead of last November. Ford's output of 205,000 will be 36 percent ahead of last year while Chrysler is forecasting a 35 percent gain to 120,000. A.M.C.'s total of 22,000 will be off 12 percent.

December output is tentatively scheduled at 700,000, up 24 percent from last year's 564,000, with G.M. up 18 percent to 395,000; Ford 37 percent to 185,000 and Chrysler 43 percent to 103,000, but with A.M.C. off 19 percent to 17,000.

...of this fall in short-term ... the spread between what ... money and the rate they ...owers has reached near-his...toric highs, despite the recent cuts in the prime rate.

At the same time, however, the slack business conditions associated with a period of easing credit have reduced business demand for loans, limiting the favorable impact that a wider spread otherwise would have on bank earnings.

Moreover, fully creditworthy companies in need of money can usually borrow more cheaply in the commercial-paper market or the Eurodollar market, where rates are now well below what banks still charge their best customers.

Bic Pen Challenges Gillette on Razors

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY

The Bic Pen Corporation, having taken on the Gillette Company in the ball pen and disposable lighter categories, is now challenging the Boston giant in its area of greatest strength—razors.

At a news conference at Wells, Rich, Greene, its agency, Bic announced yesterday it was starting national distribution of its Bic Shaver, a disposable unit, which has been on sale in the north-central states, about 14 percent of the country, since this summer.

"We beat them [Gillette] in ball points, we beat them in lighters, and there's no reason we can't beat them here," said one advertising executive. he qualified that victory statement by saying that the Bic lighter was outselling the Gillette Cricket only on its $1.49 entry.

Robert P. Adler, president of Bic, said that the new product would fit right into the corporate philosophy of marketing disposable, mass-produced products that use the same channels of distribution.

Asked during the question period about Bic Pantyhose, about which he had little to say, Mr. Adler said the sales of the item had not been going as well as hoped and that Pantyhose promotion would be put "on the back burner" while the corporate effort went behind the razor.

Bic was the first with the disposable shaving system, he said, having introduced it in Greece in 1974, a year before Gillette introduced its Good News, a disposable with a Trac II head. Bic then moved the product into Italy and the rest of the Common Market countries and Australia, Japan and Canada. It has gained as much as 40 percent of the market in some countries, he said, and in Canada, where it was introduced in the summer, it already has 5 percent.

Some 1.7 billion razor blades were sold for $385 million at retail in the United States last year, according to Bernard H. Trueblood, marketing director, who went on to say that Gillette had 58 percent of the market; Schick (owned by Warner-Lambert) 24 percent; American Safety Razor (part of Phillip Morris) 8 percent, and Wilkinson Swords (marketed by Colgate-Palmolive) 7 percent.

Mr. Adler likes to say that Bic is "Little David fighting the giants."

During the 1950's, Mr. Trueblood said, the double-edged blades accounted for 58 percent of sales but that today that type of blade is down to 25 percent of the market while bonded blades account for 44 percent of the sales.

Bic Razor has a bonded blade. It is also extremely light, another trend in the business, Mr. Trueblood said, and cheap with the suggested retail price being 25 cents, three for 69.

Suggested retail prices on premium blades alone, Mr. Trueblood said, go from 25 cents to 29.8 cents. The Gillette Good News also carries a 25-cent price tag, Mr. Trueblood said, pointing out that since it sells for about the same price as the Trac II blade, alone, the profits for Gillette have got to be slight.

The advertising for the Bic Razor, restricted entirely to network television on sports programming and in fringe time, will not break until mid-January. Usually a packaged goods company doesn't announce marketing plans so far in advance, but Mr. Adler noted that the motivation was to get publicity to help open up distribution channels. The trade is always interested in how much promotional backing a new product will get before it gets involved.

When asked, David Furman, the advertising director, said the ad budget for the national introduction would be "roughly $9 million." In addition, there is planned a sampling program that will get Bic Razor into 40 percent of United States households, and a distribution of 40 million cents-off coupons.

The same creative team that did the "Flick your Bic" campaign went to work on the Bic Razor. They are Adam Hanft, the copywriter, and Maurice Mahler, the art director, who amazed his co-workers yesterday by showing up with a dark blue vested suit—non-characteristic garb for an art director.

The overall theme is "The Bic Razor . . . a stroke of genius" and picking up from it the 30-second commercials are each made up of little vignettes of wives—next to shaving husbands—saying "He loves to get stroked in the morning." A voice over says "If you want to change shaving into stroking . . ."

Holland America Shifts

Benton & Bowles has been assigned the Holland America Cruises account with billings of $2 million.

According to a spokesman for the client, the business is being switched after only a year at Scali, McCabe, Sloves because Holland America wanted an agency that is heavy in marketing research.

Asked to comment on that statement, Marvin Sloves, president of his agency, said, "It has nothing to do with marketing or research. They got the best advertising based on sound marketing research from Scali, McCabe, Sloves. The real reason is that they got a new advertising manager who wanted a change.

Times Magazine Rates

The New York Times Magazine will raise its advertising rates and add new partial-page, four-color advertising units with its Jan. 9 issue.

The basic rate increase will be 5 percent, bringing a four-color page to $10,845 and a black-and-white page to $7,450. The new ad sizes will be four-fifths and two-fifths of a page. The magazine, with an average circulation of 1,475,430, will begin using a premium-grade paper on Nov. 14.

Case & McGrath Adds Two

Case & McGrath, already a National Distillers agency, has received two new assignments—Old Crow Bourbon and Kamchatka Vodka. Old Crow was the last National Distillers brand at Ogilvy & Mather. The only advertising for Kamchatka was handled by its distributor in southern California, where, National says, it was the best selling vodka.

Case & McGrath also handles Grande-Marque red and white Bordeaux wines, and Antiquary 12-year-old Scotch.

Agency to Herald Move

Nothing new about an ad agency that is moving. But to announce it on TV, well that's another story. Nadler & Larimer, moving this weekend into the MGM Building at 1350 Avenue of the Americas, will run 10-second spots during "Mary Hartman Mary Hartman" Friday night and "Saturday Night Live." Each spot will end up with a shot of a roaring lion.

DIEBOLD VENTURE MEETING REJECTS VOTE CHALLENGES

The special meeting of stockholdeers of the Diebold Venture Capital Corporation was finally concluded yesterday after a 15-minute session at which all of the challenges to the proposals on the proxy were rejected.

The most controversial challenge was to Proposition Five, which directed the board of directors to submit a plan for the sale of the closed-end investment company's assets to the Steadham Investment Fund.

Since the slate of directors led by Erik K. Bergstrom were elected to the board and the Bergstrom group was a rival of Steadman in a hotly contested proxy fight for Diebold, the passage of this proposition could lead to a continuation of the battle between the two groups.

Thinner Wallets

Until recently the thinnest wallets were made from expensive seal skins. Then a new material was developed—Oxford Nylon. Pin Craft Corporation patented a unique line of wallets out of this durable woven material. Oxford Nylon is 2½ times thinner than leather.

The resulting wallets are lighter, longer wearing, flexible and very thin. Thus the Oxford Nylon wallet is more comfortable to wear, and your clothes look better without a wallet bulge. Great for gifts.

Because Oxford Nylon is a woven material your wallet can have your initials embroidered in it (at extra cost).

All models have window cases for 16 or more credit cards—available in 3 popular models:

SPORTSTER—Card case & billfold, for hip or shirt pocket. $6.00

CLASSIC—Hip pocket wallet includes a separate money and note compartment. $7.00

EXECUTIVE—Hip or coat wallet with a stacking rack for your 6 most used credit cards. $8.50.

Lichtblau Sees Basis for Oil Rise Up to 7.8%

John H. Lichtblau, executive director of the Petroleum Industry Research Foundation, said yesterday that the oil exporting nations could only justify a price increase of somewhere between 2.7 and 7.8 percent if they based it on "how much prices of things they must import have risen."

Some Arab nations, Iran and Venezuela have been talking about raising world oil prices 10 to 25 percent at the Dec. 15 meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries in Qatar.

Mr. Lichtblau said that his foundation had made a detailed study of the rise in the cost of imported goods to the oil producing countries from the start of the third quarter of 1975, when the last OPEC increase was announced, through the end of the third quarter of this year, and that the increase in that period was only 2.7 to 2.8 percent.

He said that during the entire period since the dramatic oil price increase in 1973 to the present, the "composite index of OPEC countries' imports has risen by 25.8 percent while government revenue on crude oil has gone up 18 percent." On that basis alone, Mr. Lichtblau said, "a price increase of 7.8 percent might now be justified."

Management: How an Executive Works Amid Calculated Chaos

skims periodicals and merely processes his mail. He has a pronounced bias toward doing business face-to-face or by telephone—a mode enabling him to gauge emotions and move fast. But it also saddles him with the time-consuming chore of giving lengthy instructions whenever he delegates things.

Professor Mintzberg said he was content to describe how managers actually managed without trying to prescribe how they should. But he has discovered that his findings "make a lot of executives feel a lot better." As he tells it, they feel relief that his conclusions—unlike the doctrine of "rational" management—confirm what they already intuitively knew about their jobs. "I am almost like an executive psychiatrist," he said.

Much of Professor Mintzberg's work rests on his research of 10 years ago, when he spent a week at the elbow of each of five chief executives, logging their calls and counting their mail. After a decade, two of that study's five subjects now give him mixed reviews.

Bernard J. O'Keefe, chairman and president of EG&G Inc., the technology company in Wellesley, Mass., reflected in an interview that a single week's observation inevitably missed the long-range continuity of a manager's job. "You don't get the low-frequency component. You get the pulses that are going on," he said.

"But Mintzberg is right, with people like ourself," Mr. O'Keefe added. "If there's anything orderly or black-and-white, it gets decided by someone else in the organization.

Another subject, James M. Gavin, chairman of Arthur D. Little Inc. and by reputation a brilliant manager, concluded that Professor Mintzberg had been misled by superficial aspects of top executives' routines. General Gavin said that the "open-door policy"—the apparent welcoming of interruptions—was simply "an indulgence they allow themselves." He declared:

"The fact is, they've already thought through what they intend to do. They know where they're going."

Big Companies Set Up Audit Committees

Audit committees consisting of outside directors have won a niche at most major companies, according to a New York Stock Exchange survey of 1,520 listed companies.

Next Thursday the Big Board's governors are to consider its proposal that would require listed companies to establish such audit committees before 1978. The exchange's survey (to which 1,163 concerns responded) indicated that 86 percent, or 966 companies, had already set up audit committees that would qualify or were taking steps to do so. The survey did not show how many actually had committees in operation now.

The Big Board would require an audit committee to have at least three "independent" directors, with a majority of "outside" directors. No one earning his living from the company or any of its affiliates could qualify as an outside member, but a retired officer could count as an independent member.

Peso Rallies on New I.M.F. Credit

By ALAN RIDING

Special to The New York Times

MEXICO CITY, Oct. 28 —The Mexican peso rallied slightly against the dollar today after the International Monetary Fund last night approved a Mexican request for new credit facilities exceeding $960 million.

Although banking sources said there was a net outflow of funds yesterday despite the 24.9 percent downward float, the peso was set today at 26.05 units to the dollar, a 1.7 percent rise.

The sources said there was still considerable panic buying of dollars, but the country's depleted liquid reserves had been significantly bolstered by the I.M.F.'s new credit, which may eventually rise to $1.2 billion. A further $800 million Eurodollar credit is currently being negotiated with a consortium of American and European banks and should be ready for signature next month.

Fearing a new wave of inflation, private sector and labor representatives today called for a calm reaction to the new devaluation by businessmen and workers. The Industry and Commerce Ministry also announced that no new price increases would be approved for the moment.

Already suffering a slump in demand since the peso's first devaluation in 22 years Aug. 31, however, many shops were today urging customers to buy now, even on credit if necessary, before prices rise again next week.

The Government has so far withheld comment on the suggestion that wages may again be raised. But when a 23 percent nationwide rise was "recommended" by President Luis Echeverria Alvarez last month, he also announced that wages would be reviewed next January.

If new inflationary pressures can be controlled, many bankers expect the peso to recover several points in the coming weeks. Expressing their belief that the peso is now undervalued, they noted the I.M.F. statement last night that a rate of 20 pesos to the dollar would be sufficient to restore the competitiveness of Mexican products abroad.

Once President-elect José López Portillo takes office Dec. 1, however, the strength of the peso will depend on the rate of inflation, the level of Government spending and the degree of private sector confidence, the bankers said.

dropped to $1.5645 at mid-afternoon before closing at $1.5690.

The United States dollar, usually used as a medium when one currency is sold and another is bought, was dragged down again with the pound, dealers said. The dollar lost ground against most European currencies and gained only in relation to the pound and the weak Italian lira.

The dollar closed at 2.3952 West German marks, down from yesterday's 2.3978; at 2.4290 Swiss francs, down from 2.4320; at 36.82 Belgian francs, down from 36.84, and at 4.9993 French francs, down from 5.00040. The dollar rose to 865 lira from 863.3.

Futures Prices Rise Sharply for Gold and Cocoa Be...

By ELIZABETH M. FOWLER

Gold and cocoa beans rose sharply yesterday for widely different reasons.

Gold futures on the Commodity Exchange closed at $125 8/10 an ounce in terms of the December contract, up from $120. Cocoa futures for December delivery on the New York Cocoa Exchange set another high, moving up to $1.31 8/10 a pound, erasing its former high of $1.29 3/10. Cocoa closed near the new high for a gain of more than 3 cents a pound.

The International Monetary Fund auction of gold had an impact on gold futures yesterday as well as earlier in the week in that the I.M.F. accepted only bids for its gold of $117 7/10 an ounce. Another factor in the gold price rise was that Arab buying of gold increased "slightly," according to Zurich banking sources. The gold buying apparently represented an attempt to get out of the British pound, which declined again yesterday, and take refuge in gold.

For cocoa, the buying impetus came from a report by Gill & Duffus, leading British cocoa dealer and broker, that cocoa available for grinding into chocolate this year would total 1.49 million tons worldwide. This would mean that consumption would have to decline 9 percent to be even with supplies. At the same time, Gill & Duffus indicated it thought world demand instead would increase about 5 percent, indicating that higher prices would result to keep supplies and demand in balance.

Despite a rumor that Cook Industries had sold about a million tons of soybeans to the Soviet Union, soybean prices dropped yesterday on the Chicago Board of Trade. The beans apparently followed the corn prices, which were under heavy selling pressure by such leading exporters as Cargill Inc., Continental Grain, Cook and Louis Dreyfus. How to plan a happy holiday

In every season, it's fun to sit in your living room and journey through the Travel section of the Sunday New York Times. It'll carry you to exotic sands you may never see, mountains you may never climb, lands you may never roam. Or maybe you will... who can tell? All the more reason to turn to The Times—America's biggest vacation guide—to help you make your dream vacation a reality, whether it's fishing in Florida, bicycling in Bermuda, skiing in the Catskills or sightseeing in sunny Italy. Yes, there's no more satisfying way to plan a happy holiday than in the Sunday Travel section of The New York Times

Management has been able to introduce the new methods easily because the union agreed when the new beige brick plant was built that its members would not resist automation if it kept the firm competitive and expanding.

The decision to build the new plant, at the cost of $12 million, came after almost a decade of agonizing on whether to stay in the city or move to the suburbs or the Sunbelt.

The major reasons for the decision to stay were the big pool of labor and a union that was willing to cooperate in introducing automation.

Another factor, Mr. Wenzel said, was that New York is a source of "people who have the brains and the drive to come up with the new methods."

A Rebate on State Taxes

New York State also provided a $200,000-a-year rebate on state taxes for the company under the Job Incentive Program aimed at encouraging concerns to build and expand plants in the state.

Fred Simeone, a business agent for the I.U.E., said that despite constant change in production jobs, the plant was "pretty smooth running. There's a pretty good relationship between the company and people."

Top management has also borrowed from Japanese methods to motivate employees. Different sections of the plant compete in maintaining quality standards in production. Engineers, foremen, supervisors and workers sit down together to work on problems.

"We don't have banners up like in Japan," said Mr. Wenzel, who is also the head of the Motor Equipment Manufacturing Association, the trade group for the automotive aftermarket. "But our people are aware of what we're up against."

Chrysler to Pay 15 Cents In Quarterly Dividend

DETROIT, Oct. 28 (AP)—The Chrysler Corporation today declared a fourth-quarter dividend of 15 cents a share, the same as that issued in the prior quarter and only its second payment in nearly two years. The nation's No. 3 automaker said the dividend would be payable Dec. 10 to shareholders of record Nov. 10.

Although Chrysler has staged a dramatic recovery from a severe two-year slump with record profits this year, it did not restore the fourth-quarter dividend to the prerecession level of 35 cents a share, as some financial analysts had expected.

Chrysler Chairman John J. Riccardo said at a news conference Tuesday that despite a return to record earnings, "We're not satisfied with the rate of return that we are making with this company today."

Japanese Steel Makers To Study Export Curbs

TOKYO, Oct. 28 (UPI) — Japanese stainless steel pipe mills will study curbs on their exports to the United States, a spokesman for a major stainless pipe mill said yesterday. Officials of the Nippon Yakin Kogyo Company said Japanese stainless steel pipe makers had already curbed their exports to the United States voluntarily and denied a charge by United States mills that the Japanese products account for 40 percent of stainless-steel pipes sold in the United States. They said the Japanese share was at most about 20 percent of the American stainless-steel-pipe market.

Eight American stainless-steel pipe makers urged the United States International Trade Commission Tuesday to curb Japanese imports. They said, the Japanese were seeking to monopolize the United States market through exports at below-cost prices.

Penney Plans Opening Of 18 New Stores

The J. C. Penney Company said it planned to open 18 new stores in November, adding about 1 million gross square feet to its store physical plant. Seven of the units will serve new markets, while 11 will be relocations of existing stores.

The largest of the new units will be a full-line department store of 205,000 gross square feet in the Glendale Galleria, Glendale, Calif.

FMC Plans New Plant

The FMC Corporation of Chicago, announced that it would build a multimillion dollar manufacturing facility in Stuarts Draft, Va., for production of industrial drive products. The new plant, which is expected to begin operations in 1978, would supply geared and chain-driven, speed-reducing machinery to the company's Drive division in Philadelphia. FMC is a major producer of machinery and chemicals for industry and agriculture.

Gould in Expansion

Gould Inc., of Rolling Meadows, Ill., announced a multimillion dollar expansion of its high-voltage research center that will more than triple the facility's capacity for testing high energy service electrical equipment. Planned installations will take about 30 months.

Libbey Lifts Dividend

Directors of the Libbey-Owens-Ford Company of Toledo, Ohio, voted an increase of the regular quarterly common stock cash dividend to 45 cents from 37½ cents. An extra dividend of 50 cents also was voted. Both are payable Dec. 15 to holders of record Nov. 22.

Pfizer Inc. announced it had begun nationwide marketing of Minipress, a drug for treatment of high blood pressure. The drug was approved by the Federal Food and Drug Administration in July.

Funds to End Youth-Gang Violence Termed Misspent

By JUDITH CUMMINGS

The National Urban League, reacting to recent flare-ups of youth-gang violence in major cities, said yesterday that millions of dollars in public money were being misspent through failure to use the expert knowledge of experienced minority-group organizations and gang members to combat the rise.

Moreover, a New York City Police Department youth-gang detective, in an interview at the league's offices, assailed the department's youth services as "totally ineffective" and said the police were making no serious attempt to remedy the situation.

"They don't talk about the ineffectiveness of the program, they talk about locking up the kids," said Sgt. Charles Gilliam, supervisor of youth gang intelligence in Queens.

League officials contended that positive results achieved by and for former gang members had been ignored, because the people and institutions paid to produce research are not aware of them

"The Harvards of this country can never solve the problems of the Harlems of this country," Robert Woodson, director of the league's administration of justice division, said at a news conference that opened a two-day discussion with former gang members, criminologists, and others.

Conclusions of Study

"Blacks and other minorities are identified as the perpetrators, but when allocations are made for research, it goes to the white institutions," he continued.

The league official's wrath was directed specifically toward a recent study on gang violence conducted by Dr. Walter B. Miller, of the Center for Criminal Justice at the Harvard Law School, under a $49,000 grant from the Federal Law Enforcement Assistance Administration. The study concluded that gang violence had reached a magnitude "without precedence" and would increase further as the population of "minority youths" grew in the large cities.

Mr. Woodson charged the research was done "without talking to a single gang member," an approach he contended was all too common and was the reason for the failure of programs to address the real problems. Dr. Miller was not available yesterday for comment.

The failure of the programs, Urban League officials and others charged, is consequently used as "an excuse" to seek stiffer penalties that would put more black and Hispanic youth in jail for longer periods.

A School Clerk in Jericho Is Accused of Embezzling $130,000 in Last 11 Years

By ROY R. SILVER

Special to The New York Times

MINEOLA, L.I., Oct. 28—A payroll clerk of the Jericho School District and her sister were indicted today by a Nassau County grand jury on charges of having embezzled more than $130,000 from the district in the last 11 years.

Denis E. Dillon, the District Attorney, said an investigation by his Official Corruption Bureau, made at the request of the school district, had resulted in grand larceny charges against Helen L. Bozinos, the payroll clerk of the school district for the last 18 years, and her sister, Anna Luedke, of Garnerville, N.Y.

The indictment charged that Mrs. Bozinos, 46 years old, of Amityville, L.I., had embezzled the money by directing regular payment of salary checks to her sister, who was listed fictitiously as a substitute teacher. After a check was signed, the indictment said, it was given by the payroll clerk to her sister instead of being mailed out with the other checks for substitute teachers.

Mrs. Luedke, a 45-year-old Rockland County bus driver, cashed the checks at a bank in Nassau County and shared the proceeds with her sister, Mr. Dillon said.

During her tenure in the school district, Mrs. Bozinos was solely responsible for preparing the data sheets from which payroll checks were prepared and for mailing the checks to substitute teachers, the District Attorney added.

The school district maintains a regular list of substitute teachers, which has been certified and approved by the Board of Education. Mrs. Luedke's name was not on that list or on any other school record.

School officials became suspicious recently when a business manager noticed that a check, made payable to Mrs. Luedke, had been made out for substantially higher than her regular salary. An Open Letter to President Ford from a Black Businessman

Dear President Ford:

The advertisement, sponsored by the President Ford Committee, which recently appeared in more than twenty Black newspapers with the caption, "For Black Americans, President Ford is quietly getting the job done." It has compelled me to call your attention to the testimony which I gave to the Sub-Committee on International Economic Policy of the Committee on International Relations of the U.S. House of Representatives, in which I stated that a federal agency, the Overseas Private Investment Corporation (OPIC), under your administration forced a Black U.S. company, TAW International Leasing, to break the law in eight African countries under the threat of placing the company in bankruptcy. TAW is a multinational leasing company doing business in ten African countries. In forcing TAW to make these payments OPIC used the U.S. embassies in these countries as illegal conduits to remove over $440,000 from these developing nations in violation of their exchange control laws.

In addition OPIC forced TAW to transfer illegally more than $238,000 to bank accounts established and maintained in an east African nation friendly to the U.S., for the benefit of OPIC and others. OPIC is currently refusing to obey an order by the Central Bank of that nation to return these funds. This action is also contrary to the statement you made in your second debate with Jimmy Carter on October 4, 1976, that "our foreign policy must follow the highest standards of morality."

OPIC has denied that it instructed TAW to violate African exchange control laws. However, I consider this denial a blatant misrepresentation of the facts, reminiscent of the stonewall tactics used in the Watergate case. I presented to the Congressional sub-committee a letter from the treasurer of OPIC in response to my written request that OPIC provide TAW with written representation that the payments could be made legally. The letter responded that "OPIC is not in a position to render to TAW any opinion as to the local laws of the various African countries in which such transfers are to take place." Yet in the same letter OPIC wrote that OPIC "would expect you to immediately resume or instigate payments."

I also presented letters from some of the African countries where the transfers took place stating that the transfers were illegal. The fact that TAW owes over $20 million to OPIC and others is not any reason for OPIC to violate the exchange control laws of other nations to receive payment. TAW has not contested the amount owing to OPIC and others, only the requirement to violate the laws of the countries in which it operates in order to make payments as directed by OPIC. These exchange control violations are punishable by up to five years' imprisonment and an unlimited fine, depending upon the country in which the violation occured. All of TAW's African personnel who are nationals of the countries involved have been placed in jeopardy by these violations. Currently there are two Black Americans in a Zambian prison for exchange control violations. OPIC's conduct in this instance was the latest stage of a long history of misdirection and duplicity by OPIC.

In 1974 after the cancellation of TAW's largest lease agreement, OPIC began to bring increased pressure on TAW. In November 1974, OPIC and others suddenly demanded immediate repayment of all loans, seized all of TAW's U.S. bank accounts, and filed lawsuits which would have the effect of placing TAW in bankruptcy. OPIC in this way seized the money TAW would have used to pay premiums on its insurance with OPIC covering $27.6 million of leased equipment. Then OPIC cancelled the insurance on the grounds that TAW could not pay the premiums on time.

TAW negotiated with OPIC and other creditors for time to repay what it owed. Under threat of bankruptcy, TAW signed a Composition Agreement which is designed to destroy TAW rather than to protect the financial position of the creditors. For example, the agreement requires TAW to sell of 95 percent of its assets by January 31, 1977, regardless of the price it can get. This requirement contradicts good business judgment.

OPIC has attempted to stonewall any legal claims by TAW through countersuits against TAW. TAW sued in New York State Supreme Court to order OPIC to reverse the illegal transactions by returning the OPIC-directed payments. TAW also asked the court to restrain OPIC and the others from requiring additional illegal payments and from placing TAW in bankruptcy for refusing to continue them. OPIC and the lenders had already deprived TAW of funds to continue a lengthy court case by seizing all TAW's bank accounts in the U.S.

When OPIC knew that TAW for lack of funds was unable to pursue its legal case in New York, OPIC began a lawsuit in Africa to force TAW into bankruptcy. However, in Africa, TAW has funds to finance a legal battle. On learning that TAW would fight back, OPIC immediately withdrew its legal action.

TAW's problems with OPIC and the actions of the U.S. embassies have caused a member of each of the Houses of Congress to ask for an explanation from Secretary of State Kissinger. In a letter to Mr. Kissinger, they asked why U.S. embassies accepted payments that they should have known were illegal. In addition they asked if the State Department intends to comply with the request by the Central Bank concerned. To date, Mr. Kissinger has given no reply. These actions by OPIC under your administration, have significantly harmed a Black business which was listed among the ten largest Black businesses by BLACK ENTERPRISE in 1974 and is currently the largest Black American business in Africa.

Sincerely,

Thomas A. Wood

AUTOMOBILE EXCHANGE

If you are ready to drive the dream, there are three reasons to see Dick Gidron.

Dick Gidron offers you three ways to get behind the wheel of the car most people dream of driving—Cadillac.

You can purchase a factory fresh '77.
A vast array of models, colors, standard and special features await you. And the prices are very favorable.

You can lease a factory fresh '77.
t is almost impossible to beat the price for these utifully equipped Coupe de Villes. Cadillac quality nly $177 a month for 18 months (closed end lease) a downpayment of but $1,500. The best service and the rest. If you've never before considered leasing Dick Gidron will tell you about its advantages.

You can buy a pre-owned Cadillac.
ick Gidron has held aside an excellent selection, ed and maintained the way most people want them. These are the best of the best.

matter which way you choose a Gidron Cadillac, have the advantage of personal quality service. ht now, service specials are a lubrication and filter nge for but $18.95 and a tune-up for only $64.90.)

In the Bronx at 696 East Fordham Road.
ick Gidron is only 10 minutes from Westchester d an easy drive from anywhere in New York City. (The telephone number is 212-295-3000.)

So if you are ready to drive the dream, be certain to see Dick Gidron. You'll be cordially welcomed—and given all the facts.

AUTOMOBILE EXCHANGE

hallenge Avis.

See if our deal on a '77 car stacks up against your deal.

It's one thing to get a good price. And another thing to get a good deal. Because if the price fits but the lease doesn't, you won't be happy.

At Avis, we think we can fit you exactly. So before you sign anybody else's lease, ask about ours.

After all, we've got a reputation for trying harder. Make us live up to it.

Tack Så Mycket is our way of thanking you for making possible a milestone in Saab's history: the sale of the one millionth Saab this year.

And to show you our deep appreciation of your interest in Saab, we're offering the greatest deals on every 1976 Saab model we have in stock. Sedans, WagonBacks, and even the sporty EMS.

So come. Come now and test drive a Saab. Then let us show you what we mean when we say Tack Så Mycket, thanks a million, with the best year end values we've ever offered on Saab, the road car.

And, as an extra thank you, when you visit our showroom during our Tack Så Mycket days, you can win a Bancroft Bjorn Borg autograph tennis racket, simply by filling out an entry blank.

Come in and let us thank you like you've never been thanked before.

You may win this Bancroft Bjorn Borg autograph racket. Void where and where prohibited by law.

October 1972. A new kind of magazine was launched. Was it a good idea?

When you look at the headlines from four years ago, don't you have the feeling that a lot more time than that has passed?

So much has happened, so fast, that it feels like a decade.

And most of it has had a profound effect on people's pocketbooks. On how well they can live with the money they've got.

So Money's timing couldn't have been better. In October of 1972, a new kind of how-to magazine was launched, dedicated to the idea that people wanted help in managing their personal finances. In getting more mileage and more enjoyment from their money.

Came the roller coaster.

Then came the roller coaster: recession, inflation, the energy crisis, the economic recovery.

We like to think Money has been a lot of help to a lot of people in taking the ride in stride. We've changed, we've added features, we've adapted to people's new needs.

Because being useful—right now, not at some remote time in the future—is our reason for being.

Readers say "Yes."

Has Money succeeded in its aim? Our readers have certainly answered with a resounding "Yes." Circulation has nearly tripled! Up to 650,000.

That means 2,600,000* of America's smartest spenders read Money each month. And they're pretty special people.

The median household income of subscribers is $25,800. Some 83% went to college...73% are professionals or managers...61% own corporate stock...67% have two or more cars. Yes, they're economic activists. They're people who do things with their money.

Advertisers say "Yes, yes."

It's not surprising that more more advertisers have been sa "yes" to Money. Why, our ad p so far this year are 95 ahead of year's pace. Revenues? Up 38%.

More proof? Over 70 new a tisers have joined Money in Look through any issue and see quality names!

More proof? The Novem issue will have 78 ad pages. most ever.

Still more proof? Money a ages 40 direct response ads— real put-up-or-shut-up kind of vertising—in every issue.

Yes, Money was a very g idea in 1972. And it's a very g idea in 1976. Ask our readers advertisers.

MONEY. How to make it, invest it, spend it, enjoy it.
